Thoughts

Always tell the truth. In "The Critique of Pure Reason," the great philosopher, Immanuel Kant, goes to great lengths, and presents a very complex and detailed argument, to prove that one should always tell the truth. Kant's reasoning may have been purer than my mother's, but it was no more practical.

For my mother, telling the truth was not an abstract standard, it was a practical expectation in every situation. Of course, she explained that when Aunt Marion asked me what I thought of her new dress, I did not need to tell her every thought which occurred to my ten year-old brain. One could tell the truth without necessarily hurting someone's feelings. But the general rule was that one told the truth regardless of the consequences. Honesty is the best policy, not because the results are always pleasant, but because it is right.

Telling the truth, in this context, means more than avoiding a lie. It means accepting responsibility. It means recognizing the difference between right and wrong, and naming that difference. It is not easy. But it is right. And in the long run it makes for happier, healthier and more authentic living.

Police Roundup

Man charged with assault

A local man was arrested Tuesday in the emergency room of Manchester Memorial Hospital where he allegedly assaulted two employees who work there.

Daniel Trueman, 31, of 466 Main St., was charged with third-degree assault, breach of peace and failure to submit to fingerprint processing, police said. He was held without bond and scheduled to appear Monday in Manchester Superior Court, police said.

Police were called to the hospital at 5 p.m. on a report of an unruly male. A female employee in the emergency room said that Trueman had thrown his belongings on the floor, and when she tried to calm him down Trueman grabbed her right wrist, twisted it and pushed her into a glass wall, police said. He then assaulted a male employee, police said.

After he was arrested, Trueman became belligerent and refused to be processed properly, police said.

Witnesses help in arrest

The reaction on the part of witnesses and a bank teller led to the arrest of a 29-year-old local man who is charged with causing an accident in front of a local bank and then leaving the scene, police said.

Harold McNeely, 9 Warren St., was charged with evading responsibility and issued a verbal warning for failing to yield to another driver's right of way, police said.

McNeely was issued a summons to appear in court, police said.

According to police, a 66-year-old woman was driving in a parking lot at Connecticut National Bank, 220 N. Main St., when a brown van pulled away from the driveway and struck her car. The woman said the van's driver then sped through the parking lot, blaring his horn to warn traffic, police said.

A witness noted the license plate of the fleeing van, and the victim called police who found out from the teller who was driving the van, police said.

Fired cop appeals to labor mediators

By Dianna M. Talbot
Manchester Herald

Former police officer Steven G. Ike was scheduled to appear this morning before the state Labor Department's Board of Mediation and Arbitration in an effort to get his job back.

During the hearing, Daley said, the union will argue that Ike's firing was unjustified because a subsequent investigation did not prove any relationship between Ike and the girl.

William Daley, president of the local police union and a supporter of Ike's cause, said the hearing was scheduled at 10 a.m. and could continue for more than one day, depending on how much testimony is heard.

Police Chief Robert D. Lannan fired Ike on Dec. 22 for allegedly firing a gun at a woman who was lying on the ground with a 15-year-old local girl, whose identity has been protected because of her age, and for failing to report an alleged rape that involved her and another man.

Ike also was cited for conduct unbecomingly an employee; neglect or inattention to police duty; concealing information or evidence essen-

Despite protests, board passes 45% rate hike

By Rick Santos
Manchester Herald

Residents whose sewer system is connected to the town sewer system will face a 45% rate hike beginning next month to help offset costs of the $28.5 million upgrade of the sewage treatment plant.

The fee increase was adopted by the town's Board of Directors Tuesday, but not before citizens and Republican board members said they were upset with such a steep increase.

"I will vote to approve this very reluctantly," said Republican Director Wally Irish, adding that he understood the need for the higher rates, but not the reason why less severe increases were not made over the past few years.

In 1988, the directors passed a 35 percent increase in sewer rates. Irish suggested also that the town could be served better if a commission was established solely to oversee water and sewer policies.

"I feel, as an elected official, almost overwhelmed by the issues that come to us in water and sewer," he said.

Irish said the close watch of a commission may have prevented the town from being fined $300,000 by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for illegally filling in wetlands during the beginning stages of the sewage plant project.

Newly appointed Republican Director Geoffrey Naab questioned Water and Sewer Administrator Robert Young regarding other costs associated with the wetlands fines, including legal fees and money lost while contractors were forced to halt work on the project.

Utilities district will vote on land taking

By Alex Girali
Manchester Herald

A request by the town to take a portion of the land in front of the Eighth Utilities District firehouse on Tolland Turnpike for widening the road will be considered by the district directors at a special meeting Thursday night.

The meeting is set for 7:30 p.m. in Donald White Hall, 18 Main St.

Because a land transfer is involved, the district directors will have to act on the question if the directors approve it.

The transfer will be considered by the directors at a special meeting June 18 along with a proposed ordinance and the reappropriation of lapsed funds in the fire department budget to buy protective gear for firefighters.

The town wants to take a small triangle of land in front of the firehouse and to pay the district one dollar for it.

When the district directors discussed the transaction at their last meeting, they wanted several questions cleared up.

The major one was that a traffic light in front of the firehouse be included in the road project. William Camosci, town director of engineering services, has told district officials the light is being designed into the project.

Other concerns are the slope of the driveway, the quality of the driveway paving, and a construction schedule that keeps at least half the driveway open at any time.

The ordinance under consideration would require employers within the district to allow volunteer firefighters to leave their workplace to respond to fires.

At the meeting Thursday, the directors are also slated to discuss buying wardrobes from the prison at Somers for use in the Tolland Turnpike firehouse.

The celebration, particularly for clearing up the area the day after the festivities. Volunteers should contact Terry Kotach at 647-3211 between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m.

The celebration will be held at the Bicentennial Bandshell on the campus of the Manchester Community College June 30. The rain date is July 1.

Planned activities include a chicken barbecue, concessions, face painting, clowns and a fireworks display.

The committee is also seeking volunteers for various tasks during HARTFORD — Connecticut residents overwhelmingly support AIDS education programs in high schools and condom promotion programs, according to a survey conducted for state health officials.

The survey of 990 state residents, released Monday by the Department of Health Services, also found that one out of every seven state residents has been tested for the AIDS virus and nearly one in six say they

Man gets 23 years in DNA rape case

HARTFORD — A Bristol man who was convicted of sexual assault despite testimony on his behalf by an FBI genetics expert was sentenced to 23 years in prison.

Ricky C. Hammond, 26, sobbed and said he felt sorry for the victim just before his sentencing in Superior Court Tuesday, but again denied that he had any sexual contact with the victim, but I sympathize with the victim, but I did not commit the crime.

Assistant State's Attorney John Malone told the judge that Hammond deserved more than 25 years in prison and after that a suspended term should be held over his head for showing no remorse for the crime.

Furill sentenced Hammond to 25 years in prison, suspended after 25 years and three years probation. The judge said the crime stood in the same realm as those that were once punishable by death.

Malone said Hammond will join his brother, Martin Hammond, 28, formerly of Bristol, at Somers State Prison. Martin Hammond is serving a 25-year sentence for strangling a Bristol woman to death after raping her in 1985.

Commission holds up surgery center request

By Dianna M. Talbot
Manchester Herald

Manchester Memorial Hospital has filed a certificate of need with the state Commission on Hospitals and Health Care for permission to construct an ambulatory surgery center.

The commission recently issued a memorandum asking hospitals to defer any filing of new certificates until October 1 because it is too busy reviewing hospital budgets for next year on work certificates of need.

A spokesman for the infirmary said the hospital will have to wait until the commission's certificate review moratorium is lifted.

"Obviously, we feel we need the center as soon as possible, but we are aware of the commission's upcoming crunch of budget reviews and that it may take a while for the center to be built for the

Lieberman says PLO talks should be halted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Joseph I. Lieberman, D-Conn., has called on the Bush administration to suspend negotiations with the Palestine Liberation Organization because of continued terrorist acts directed at Israel.

Lieberman is co-author of the PLO Compliance Act, which requires the State Department to issue periodic reports to Congress on the PLO's actions. An attempt to stop the PLO forces in Israel last week is the latest example of the organization's continued use of terrorism as a political tactic, Lieberman said.

PLO leader Yassir Arafat has broken the promise he made in December, 1988, to renounce terrorism," Lieberman said. "That promise was one of the reasons our nation initiated a dialogue with the PLO. Arafat's failure to live up to his word gives us every reason to suspend our dialogue with his organization."

With last week's raid, which was intercepted by Israeli forces, the State Department should live up to its pledge to suspend its dialogue with the PLO if the organization continues to be involved in terrorist activity, Lieberman said.

Vega denied murder parole

SOMERS (AP) — The state parole board denied release to Evelyn Vega for the second time Tuesday, again citing the viciousness of the 1979 Waterbury robbery in which three Puritator guards were killed.

Board Chairman Henry Bissone Jr. cited the seriousness of the crime as the main reason for denying Vega's parole. He told her she could apply for parole again in April.

Vega was one of four people — two couples — convicted in the Puritator case. Vega and Donna Couture Souza have been in Niantic prison since 1984 and were denied parole last year. They are both serving 110-year sentences.

The two men, convicted as the triggermen in the killings, are both serving life terms, as are both women. They are serving 37 to 40 years in state prison.

The women pleaded guilty and testified against the men, admitting that they bought guns and equipment for the robbery and dropped the men off at the Puritator depot in Waterbury on April 16, 1979.

spread through "French" kissing. Weinstein said state officials assume that the percentage of people who have been tested for the virus will increase steadily. She added that the state does not recommend testing for all people.

"If you and your sex partner are both faithful to each other, you shouldn't have to be tested," she said.

Nearly all those polled rated sexual abstinence and use of condoms as effective techniques to prevent AIDS. However, smaller groups mentioned ineffective measures, such as using spermicidal jelly during sex (14 percent), washing or douching after sex (9 percent), or using birth control pills (3 percent).

The State Department of Health Services has received 1,618 AIDS cases in Connecticut, including 537 in children. Of those stricken, 937 are dead.

Abuse led to Aparo murder fantasies

By Denise Lavioie
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — Karin Aparo told a jury that her first memory of her mother is being hit across the face, as her defense attorney attempted to show that Aparo fantasized about killing her mother only after a lifetime of abuse.

"The earliest memory I have of her is when she was slapping me," Aparo said.

In nearly three hours on the witness stand Tuesday, Aparo recounted to testify in her own defense and about a pattern of abuse that ranged from her mother threatening to burn her face with an iron to humiliating her in front of her schoolmates.

Aparo, 19, is charged with murder conspiracy and accessory to murder in the Aug. 5, 1987 strangulation of her mother, Joyce. Her former boyfriend, Dennis Coleman, 28, confessed to the murder and is now serving a 34-year prison sentence.

He testified earlier that Aparo begged him to kill her mother for more than a year and masterminded the murder plot.

Aparo's description of the alleged abuse came after hours of legal wrangling over whether her attorney should be allowed to introduce testimony on the abuse.

Attorney Hubert Santos said he would use the testimony to show that Aparo's talk about killing her mother was only a way of acting out her frustration after years of abuse.

Aparo said when she was just 4, her mother once picked her up from school and slapped her so hard that she fell against a wall.

Town leading in pilot physics course

By Nancy Foley
Manchester Herald

Many high school students regard a physics class with a sense of foreboding and will go to almost any lengths to avoid taking one.

A course called the Principles of Technology, being offered at both Manchester High School and Howell Cheney Regional Vocational Technical School, is designed to make physics attractive and understandable to all students, according to Gregory C. Kane, a consultant with the Department of Education's division of vocational, technical and adult education, who helped bring the program to the school.

The course combines the theory of traditional physics with the "hands-on" approach of technology education classes, Kane said, and appeals to both college and non-college bound students. Technology education is the new term for industrial arts.

The course is team-taught at Manchester High School by a science teacher, Peter C. Vincenzoni, and a technology education teacher, Neil J. Foster. At Howell Cheney, the course is taught by physics teacher Stephen Curry and a weekly rotation of guest instructors.

Manchester is one of only a handful of pilot sites for the course this year, according to Kane, who was a teacher at Manchester High before taking a position with the state last year. The other sites are in West Hartford, Greenwich and Griswold.

"I thought it was excellent," said Janice Horn, a member-elect of the Board of Education who sat in on one of the classes several weeks ago. After a lecture, the students worked in groups and learned how

Directors voice partisan gripes over rules, procedures at meeting

By Rick Santos
Manchester Herald

Even with the absence of the argumentative Deputy Mayor Ronald Oella, Tuesday's Board of Directors meeting was marked by partisan politicking and gripes over rules and procedures.

Democrats fired berbs at Town Attorney Maureen Chmielecki for an opinion she issued regarding the procedure for appointing directors to fill vacancies.

Chmielecki had said that if the directors do not approve appointments themselves, then the town manager has the authority to make an appointment.

But Democratic minority leader Stephen T. Cassano said he wanted the ruling revisited because "it provides the manager with the opportunity to appoint his own boss."

He said a revision of the Town Charter may be necessary to clarify the ruling, but it is also possible that Chmielecki's interpretation of the Charter may be erroneous.

Nevertheless, Cassano said he wanted to establish a policy that would force the town attorney to provide directors with written copies of all opinions.

Chmielecki said she would provide written copies of rulings, and Cassano responded by requesting copies of another recent opinion of the attorney. The second ruling stated that board members are ex-officio members of all appointed commissions, and thereby have the right to attend the closed sessions of the commissions.

In a separate complaint, Democratic Director Peter P. DiRosa Jr. said the board has been lax in not formally establishing the rules which govern its operations.

Traditionally, members of new boards — in one of their initial meetings — either re-affirm the rules of preceding boards or amend such rules and adopt them.

"I don't care which rules we follow as long as we follow some rules," DiRosa said.

He said he was fed up with the arbitrary procedures which the board has been using.

Chmielecki said she agreed that a set of rules needed to be formally adopted.

DiRosa then went on to criticize Republican Mayor Terry Werhoben for establishing committees without requesting informal approval from board members.

He said his primary concern is that some of the committees which Werhoben has recently appointed are charged with tasks which are too narrow.

"If we appoint committees to try to solve every problem in the community, there's not enough hours of the day or members (to make up such committees)," DiRosa said.

But Werhoben said the purpose of the committees is to show the residents that the directors are working for them.

Superintendent of Schools James P. Kennedy deserved more money, but said the board wanted to set an example for upcoming negotiations with unions. The board heard Kennedy's request Monday evening and will officially vote on Monday.

In addition, Kennedy's contract will be renewed for three years, Maffe said. Currently, he is in the second year of a three-year contract. He will also receive an increase in his car allowance from $1,800 to $2,800, Maffe said. His assistants in the central office were granted a seven percent salary increase with no changes in their fringe benefit packages, he added.

In a performance review, Kennedy was given an overall positive evaluation, Perkins said.

Republican Gloria DellaFera said the board would like Kennedy to hold teachers more accountable for the education students are receiving, especially in light of salary increases they have received.

Lieberman's aides offer help at office

U.S. Sen. Joseph I. Lieberman's aides are staffing a mobile office at town hall to help residents solve problems related to federal agencies and to listen to their views.

The mobile office is open Tuesday and Wednesdays, June 13 and 20, from noon to 6 p.m. The Democratic senator's aides will help residents on matters including Social Security, the Internal Revenue Service, and veterans' benefits.

Dem group says Weicker will end up helping party

By John Diamond
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A national Democratic group says Lowell P. Weicker's independent gubernatorial campaign will help Connecticut Democrats, a prediction disputed by one of both legislative branches and the governor's staff.

The national Democratic strategy group "Project 500" assessed the chances of Weicker's independent gubernatorial campaign will help Connecticut Democrats, a prediction disputed by one of both legislative branches and the governor's staff.

In Connecticut, the gubernatorial campaign launched by Weicker, a former Republican senator, will weaken the Republican candidate and allow the Democrats to hold the state's top office, the group predicted. Weicker, a maverick who had stormy relations with his own party, is running as an independent.

Dick Foley, chairman of the Connecticut GOP, said Project 500 hasn't been doing its homework on Connecticut.

"For the price of a newspaper subscription in the state of Connecticut, they could find out perhaps a lot more than they already know," Foley said.

Recent polls show that more than 40 percent of Democrats are supporting Weicker while the former senator draws only about 32 percent of his support from Republican ranks, Foley said.

"If there's a split, they get it a lot worse than we do," Foley said.

Foley added that the group is wasting its time on the gubernatorial race because in Connecticut, the governor has no control over the redistricting process.

The state Legislature, which will conduct the redistricting based on the 1990 census, is currently controlled by the Democrats in both branches.

In the House the ratio is 88 to 63, in the Senate it is 23 to 13.

According to Foley, Republican challengers in the House could threaten as many as 25 incumbent Democrats and eight Republicans.

Dickson said current polling numbers will change and Democrats will rally around the party's nominee.

Founded in 1965, Project 500 has helped states with political advice and financial contributions.

Federal prosecutors tried to prove that Dyer cashed in on the city's economic boom by shaking down developers for more than $100,000 in payoffs in exchange for his support for their real estate projects.

The mayor's office, prosecutors said, was run as a racketeering enterprise for the last five years of Dyer's reign.

But Dyer could be sentenced to up to three years in prison and fined $250,000 for failing to list on his income tax return a $10,000 capital gain he made on the sale of a condominium in 1986. He was scheduled to be sentenced today by U.S. District Judge Jose Cabranes.

Dyer, 43, was the first public official in the state to be charged under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act or RICO.

He was indicted in March 1989 with eight other individuals, including six public officials. All nine people charged as a result of a federal investigation into municipal corruption in Danbury have now been convicted of tax violations.

China frees 97 student protesters

BEIJING (AP) — China announced today it had freed 97 more participants in last year's democracy movement after the anniversary of the movement's bloody demise passed with only a few small protests.

The releases bring to 881 the number freed in the past six months, out of thousands arrested. But new arrests have been reported as recently as last week.

For the first time, two top student leaders were among those freed. Xiong Wei and Zhou Fengsuo, both students at Qinghua University, were on the government's list of 21 most-wanted students and were arrested last June.

Zhou was turned in by his sister and Xiong surrendered in his mother's company, according to officials accounts.

The No. 1 student on the list, Wang Dan, remains in jail. Five others on the list escaped abroad.

Of the 97 released, 21 had been jailed in Shanghai, a brief Xinhua News Agency report said. They included Yao Yongzhan, a Hong Kong student who was released Tuesday, the Hong Kong government reported. There was no word on when he would be allowed to return home.

Rumors that a release was imminent circulated in Beijing last week. The government waited until after the anniversary Sunday and Monday of last year's army attack on student-led protesters in thousands of people died.

Soldiers and police patrolled Beijing in force on both days to head off any commemorative protests, and were largely successful.

The only major incident, a rally Sunday night by hundreds of Beijing University students, was confined to the campus. Students on other cam-passes expressed their anger by smashing beer bottles, and several non-students held small protests near Tiananmen Square.

Xinhua said the 97 were given lenient treatment after having "voluntarily confessed their wrongdoings and expressed a willingness to repent." None had been charged or tried.

"Those who obstinately stick to an incorrect course and refuse to repent will be punished strictly in accordance with the law," Xinhua said.

The protests last year began as a student movement and escalated into a massive nationwide outcry against the Communist Party's heavy-handed and increasingly corrupt rule.

Senior leader Deng Xiaoping and other aging revolutionaries who ordered the crackdown maintain that a small group of plotters orchestrated the protests in an effort to topple the party.

Root enters 5 guilty pleas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thomas Root, the lawyer whose mysterious Atlantic Ocean plane crash last year came amid a probe of his law practice, faces up to 35 years in prison and $1.25 million in fines on his guilty plea to felony charges of misrepresenting clients.

A federal grand jury in Washington had returned a 33-count indictment against Root in March. Root, 37, declined comment after entering his plea.

Root's attorney, Eugene Proper, said Root "feels he's getting a lot more attention" than he otherwise would because of the July 13, 1989, flight.

Root's Cessna 210 airplane crashed in the Atlantic off the Bahamas after a mysterious six-hour flight in which he said he blacked out and the plane continued on autopilot until it hit the water.

Root, an Alexandria, Va., communications attorney, pleaded guilty to five felony counts in federal court Tuesday. The charges involved clients who were seeking broadcast licenses from the Federal Communications Commission.

He was indicted Monday by a grand jury in North Carolina on 455 counts of securities fraud and other charges.

U.S. kayaker missing after Niagara ride

NIAGARA FALLS, Ontario (AP) — A U.S. stuntman is missing after going over the Niagara Falls in a kayak, Canadian police said.

A red kayak belonging to the 28-year-old man from Tennessee was recovered below Horseshoe Falls on the Canadian side, "all in one piece," said Maureen Quinn, a constable with the Niagara Parks Police. But she said authorities "found nothing else, just the kayak. No body's been found."

The man, whose identity was not disclosed pending notification of next of kin, was last seen at about 1:45 p.m., Quinn said.

The Canadian falls, the world's largest by volume, are 181 feet high, or about as tall as a 13-story building.

Another constable, Kim Davis, said the stuntman was trying to complete a stunt that had been planned for about 10 years. Police said nobody has ever tried to kayak over the Canadian side of the falls.

"Barrels, yes," said Quinn of other attempts to go over the falls in enclosed capsules and live. But, she said, "it doesn't seem plausible he could do it (and survive)."

George Bailey of the Niagara Parks Commission said the man attempted the stunt several years ago on the American side of the falls, but park police stopped him.

He said the man was accompanied by a film crew and a friend who took photographs.

Quinn said police received a call that the stuntman had entered the water about a half-mile above the falls but "by the time we responded it was too late. ... (He) actually went over the brink."

She said "several people saw him go over. It was videotaped. There were plenty of witnesses."

Ken Kitchen was working in Ontario Hydro tower overlooking the Niagara River when he saw a man stripped to the waist in a kayak. He said the utility closed the dam gates, reducing the water flow to the falls in an attempt to stop him.

The man's boat grounded, but he picked it up and moved it into the middle of the river, Kitchen said.

"He was gone before our help could get there. All we could do was sit and watch helplessly," Kitchen said.

At a press conference later Tuesday, police showed reporters a videotape a tourist made of the incident.

The film shows a man in a kayak successfully negotiating the rapids of the Niagara River just before the falls. Then, he disappears.

"It's beyond me why anyone would attempt this," said George Bailey of the Niagara Parks Commission. "He obviously doesn't know our falls."

Dave Munday, who went over the falls in a steel barrel three years ago, said people who try such stunts are usually not aware of the dangers of the falls.

"A lot of people underestimate what's at the bottom," he said. "I did myself. It's just solid rock down there. People don't realize that."

Students return to find their school vandalized

PARIS (AP) — Vandals broke into a high school, painted swastikas on the walls and left behind blood-soaked human skulls and bones, police said today.

The vandalism was discovered Tuesday when students returned after a three-day holiday weekend to the Bernard-Halley high school in Glen, on the Loire River about 75 miles south of Paris.

The intruders, who apparently climbed in through a window, painted swastikas and Jewish Stars of David on the ground floor, cut telephone cords, then went to the second floor and left blood-covered human bones, including about six skulls, police said.

Slogans were written on the walls in German.

Tests were being conducted to determine when the bones were dug up and where the blood came from.

There has been a wave of neo-Nazi and anti-Semitic vandalism across France in the past four weeks, following the discovery May 10 of a macabre decoration at a Jewish cemetery in the southern town of Carpentras. Thirty-four tombs there were vandalized, and the body of an elderly man was dug up and impaled on an umbrella handle.

Feinstein wins California; black will face off against Helms

By The Associated Press

Dianne Feinstein reached out for Democratic unity today after winning her party's nomination for California governor of California and criticized Republican "caretaker government."

North Carolina Democrats picked a black man to try to dethrone GOP Sen. Jesse Helms.

But the biggest winner on a nine-state primary night Tuesday was arguably Sen. Ted Cochran of Mississippi. Unthoughtful for the GOP nomination, he also was assured of a third term when no candidate ran in the Democratic primary.

A half-dozen other senators gained nominations for new terms. Democrats Bill Bradley of New Jersey, Howell Heflin of Alabama and Max Baucus of Montana easily overcame challenges within their party, while Democrat Tom Harkin of Iowa and Republicans Larry Pressler of South Dakota and Pat Domenici of New Mexico were unopposed.

Incumbent governors in Alabama, Iowa and South Dakota also were re-nominated.

Democratic primary for governor that drew most of the nationwide attention, both for the size of the state and because the next governor will play a large role in determining which party benefits from a census that may increase the state's congressional delegation by a half-dozen seats.

"One mission completed, one to go," former San Francisco Mayor Feinstein told supporters after securing her victory in a hard-fought primary.

With 94 percent of the precincts counted, she was gaining 52 percent of the vote, to 41 percent for Attorney General John Van de Kamp.

Sen. Pete Wilson breezed to an easy primary victory on the GOP side, and said he'd keep the governor's office in Republican hands. He decided to run for the job when two-term GOP Gov. George Deukmejian declined to seek a third term.

"My friends in the Democratic Party, open up tonight, because this is your last victory party of the 1990s," said Wilson, who is expected to raise close to $20 million for his campaign.

Feinstein praised Van de Kamp in her victory speech and said the fall campaign will be a choice between two Californians. "One ... with a declining quality of life, more crime, more traffic. It is content with caretaker government," she said.

"But our California is a bold place," she said.

"How sweet it is," a jubilant Gantt told supporters after dispatching prosecutor Mike Eastley with 57 percent of the vote in North Carolina. His victory made him the first of his race to win a Senate nomination this century in North Carolina.

"I want to tell you that God is good, yes he is. It's a new day in North Carolina," said Gantt, a former mayor of Charlotte.

Helms congratulated Gantt on "a hard-earned victory."

Alabama boasted the closest race of the night, a Democratic primary to pick an opponent for incumbent GOP Gov. Guy Hunt.

With 83 percent of precincts reporting in the Democratic primary, Education Association lobbyist Paul Hubbert claimed a spot in the runoff, gaining 32 percent of the vote. Attorney General Don Siegelman was winning 24 percent, former Gov. Fob James 22 percent and Rep. Ronnie Flippo 18 percent. Two other candidates trailed.

"This is no place for the faint-hearted," said Flippo as the long count continued.

In an Iowa primary contest viewed as a referendum on abortion, House Speaker Don Avonson claimed the Democratic nomination for governor.

Mixed reviews for show

The town Board of Directors went before the TV cameras Tuesday night for the first time and the show, telecast live by Cox Cable, is likely to get mixed reviews from Manchester viewers who tuned in.

At the outset there were some pleasant presentations of awards to people who have made contributions to the community.

During a series of public hearings, viewers who managed to follow the dialogue got a lesson in the intricacies of town budgeting. Anyone who had assumed the process was simple must have come away from the TV set confused.

Many who monitored the meeting may be awed by the amount of business the board has to conduct and the amount of time it takes to conduct it.

And if they conclude that matters could be speeded up if the directors spent less time and effort on partisan politics and more on government, they would be quite right.

Too much of the air time Tuesday was devoted to the exchange of salvos between Republicans and Democrats over who was responsible in what degree for the sins of the past and the effect they have on the present.

Political junkies may have appreciated that segment of the broadcast, but to a good bet that most other viewers did not find it a very rewarding replay. The 1991 local election campaign began the moment the votes were counted in the 1989 election.

One peril in televising board meetings is that some of the participants will play to the audience for effect. That did not happen Tuesday night. The meeting was not markedly different from other recent meetings of the board. The viewers got an accurate picture.

Trump card

To the Editor: The people of Bolton rejected their town budget at a special referendum. By majority vote, the voters sent a clear and convincing message to their elected officials that the $9.2 million budget was too high and must be reduced.

However, things are not as simple as they seem. There is something not a hidden trump card and, unfortunately, in today's democracy, that card is often held by politicians.

Just minutes after the vote was tallied, comments were made by some elected officials that cast doubt on the public will. Although the budget was defeated by approximately a 10 percent margin, Ray Ursin, vice chairman of the Board of Finance, said there was no clear mandate from the public. He also publicly stated that the request by TNT (The Neglected Taxpayers group) to limit spending to a 5 percent increase, could not be met.

A Board of Education member has also been quoted as saying the referendum didn't indicate anything about how much the voters wanted to spend on education.

The people of Bolton should carefully watch and, more importantly, remember what their elected officials do. At stake is far more than the practical need to approve a budget, but a very real test of representative democracy.

Someone once told me that democracy requires a good memory. I might add that no one remembers better than an angry voter. For democracy's sake, and especially over the next few days, I suggest we all keep a very close eye on our politicians.

Vestiges of Noriega remain

By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta

WASHINGTON — Jorge H. Correa was the kind of guy who rose to the top under the regime of Panama's Manuel Noriega. As the officer in charge of Noriega's Modelo jail, he reportedly freed drug traffickers for a price. Correa got caught (a faux pas even in the most corrupt of countries) and was exiled briefly to Bolivia.

But unlike Noriega, Correa is a free man today. In fact, he is a ranking major in Panama's new police force, the "public force." He and other Noriega cronies in that police force survived the U.S. invasion and are rising to the top again.

Sources in Panama tell us that the public force is dominated by members of Noriega's notoriously corrupt Panama Defense Force and that the new government of Guillermo Endara is making little effort to screen out the bad apples.

We investigated several cases and found that Endara isn't picky enough about who gets a gun and a badge these days.

Within the highest ranks of the new public force sit some of the most powerful elements of Noriega's P.F.D. Noriega's former chief of police, chief of special operations and chief of U.S.-Panamanian joint military operations are all ranking colonels in the new force. In all, some 14,000 P.F.D. members are now gainfully employed as security police for the Endara government.

After the U.S. invasion in December 1989, Col. Roberto Armiño was promptly installed as the head of the new public force. He is believed to be the officer who tipped off Noriega to a coup attempt last October and allowed Noriega to escape the clutches of the mutineers. A huge public outcry followed Armiño's appointment to lead the public force and he was dismissed.

In another case, 13 former P.F.D. members involved in the holding of American hostages at the Marión during the invasion later turned up in the ranks of the new public force. The 13 were eventually weeded out, but evidence came across shows that they represent only the tip of the iceberg.

Apparently all a recruit must do to get into the force is express anti-Noriega sentiments. But sources close to the U.S. Southern Command in Panama told our associate Dean Boyd that while the recruits may now be conventionally anti-Noriega, "most are still committed to his cause — corruption."

Recent incidents in Panama revealed how unsettled the country is in spite of U.S. claims that the invasion has set Panama on a new track.

Panamanian special prosecutor Rodrigo Miranda was fired when he implied that high-ranking members of the public force were involved in the kidnapping and death of a 3-year-old boy — the grandson of a former P.F.D. colonel who was thought to have looted banks on the day of the invasion.

Miranda claims he got his information from sources in the U.S. Southern Command, but Southern Command officials are now keeping a tight lip about the case.

This scandal, and partisan rivalry, help to keep Endara's balance of power precarious. The rumors climaxed May 1 when Endara was in the United States and his presidential guard got involved in a skirmish at the palace. The government later claimed there was no coup attempt — just a training exercise for the guards. But so far no one has adequately explained why Endara's beloved godson was killed in this exercise.

Despite the unrest, Washington is reportedly trying to wean the public force from dependence on the United States by gradual withdrawal of U.S. military policemen. The public force, which likely will receive millions of dollars in U.S. aid, has had a quick anti-corruption course and general police training.

Quayle a drag
George Bush's political advisers are discouraged by polls showing that Dan Quayle is a serious drag on Bush's popularity. In a close election, Quayle could be the kiss of death for Bush. But his dumping Quayle would roll the waters for Bush because of his conservative supporters who see their soulmate Quayle as their link to the White House. Bush has already argued the right with talk of tax increases and with his soft response on the issue of independence for the Soviet Baltic states.

Mini-editorial
Financial regulators have not heeded the lessons taught by two major stock market crashes in recent years. Massive program trading is still prevalent and unless it is brought under control, it will be a source of instability for the market throughout the decade. This situation is proof once again that the federal government can mobilize in a crisis, but paralyzed when it comes to prevention.

Riders find alternatives to Greyhound

WASHINGTON (AP) — Train ridership is up, small bus companies are picking up more passengers and Lera Dwyer's van service is keeping two dozen Texas towns linked to the big city.

At Greyhound Lines Inc. tries to reorganize its finances under bankruptcy laws while pledging to continue most service with replacements for striking drivers, many travelers already are finding ways to cope without America's only nationwide bus system.

They may be paying more, waiting longer for connections and resorting to other transportation modes, but few have complained to Washington since 6,300 Greyhound drivers walked out March 2 in a pay and job security dispute.

"I haven't received a single call from any legislator, mayor, governor or anyone complaining about a lack of service because of the Greyhound strike," said Wayne J. Smith, executive director of the United Bus Operators of America.

"If there really is such a lack of service out there, I'm sure we would have heard from someone," said Smith, whose group represents many of the nation's more than 2,000 independent bus companies.

In urban America, regional carriers are filling in where the scaled-down Greyhound has cut service. Smith said. In rural America, he said, people are relying more on the automobile or finding other alternatives.

Mr. Dwyer, who owns Skylark Transportation in Wichita Falls, Texas, said the size of her little line has quadrupled since the Amtrak ridership up 35 percent between

Test holds hope in diagnosing Alzheimer's

CHICAGO (AP) — A lab test to diagnose Alzheimer's disease in the living could be developed within two years using a new technique that has been highly accurate on brain tissue from cadavers, scientists say.

Currently, there is no precise way of diagnosing the memory-robbing disease in the living. Doctors make a diagnosis based on the patient's symptoms. After death, an autopsy can help confirm the diagnosis, but the technique now in use is inexact.

The new test measures a protein that is believed to be associated with Alzheimer's and has not been detected in the brains of normal people and those with other neurological disorders, said neurochemist Hossein A. Ghanbari, senior research scientist at Abbott Laboratories in suburban North Chicago.

The test for living patients could come within two years but would need to be 1,000 times more sensitive, Ghanbari said in a telephone interview Tuesday.

The protein, which researchers call the Alzheimer's disease-related protein, was found in 48 of 56 Alzheimer's patients, the scientists reported.

No detectable levels of the protein were found in autopsied brain tissue from 27 patients free of neurological disease and 28 patients with neurological diseases other than Alzheimer's, the researchers said.

Since they submitted their report, they have tested about 240 more brain samples and "all have about 90 percent agreement with the diagnosis," Ghanbari said.

An estimated 4 million U.S. adults, mostly over age 65, have Alzheimer's a degenerative brain and memory disorder. Death usually comes in five to 10 years after complications from bed sores, feeding problems and pneumonia.

Diagnosis depends mostly on looking for symptoms, which begin with memory loss and difficulty speaking and progress to personality changes and loss of ability to function. Doctors adopt the process of elimination, ruling out one by one other causes of the dementia, such as syphilis or poisoning.

Even after autopsy, current methods are inexact for diagnosing Alzheimer's.

Confirming the diagnosis in patients who have died requires dissecting the brain, examining stained samples under a microscope and counting the characteristic nerve plaques and hardened deposits, or tangles, of Alzheimer's.

"The neuropathologist has to decide which ones to count and which ones not to count," said Creighton Phelps, vice president for medical and scientific affairs with the Chicago-based Alzheimer's Association. "It's subjective."

"This new test would remove the subjective component — either it's there or it's not," Phelps said. As such, it would be "the only quantitative test that we have."

The test will need confirmation by other scientists, said Phelps, a former program director at the National Institute on Aging's Neuroscience and Neuropsychology of Aging Program.

School funding in New Jersey held to be unfair

By Michael Mokrzycki
The Associated Press

New Jersey joined a dozen states where courts have struck down school-funding systems for shortchanging the poor. In one of those states, Texas, an education-finance overhaul package was speeding through the Legislature.

In a 7-0 ruling Tuesday, New Jersey's Supreme Court ordered lawmakers to ensure by the 1991-92 school year that poor districts are able to spend about as much per student as wealthier districts in the 1.3 million-student system.

The decision is widely expected to force lawmakers to raise taxes, as has happened in Kentucky, Arkansas, Wyoming and other states. Texas' House and Senate approved tax increases Tuesday.

The wave of court orders rejecting the way states fund schools is a legacy of the rich-get-richer, poor-get-poorer 1980s, one expert said. "Since 1980, the gap between rich districts and poor districts has been increasing, that's why we have this trend. The poor are most depressed than they were during the 1970s," said Arthur Wise, director of the Washington-based RAND Center for the Study of the Teaching Profession.

In most states, schools are supported primarily by local property taxes. The New Jersey court found the setup unconstitutional. It ruled, in effect, that determining school funding based on property tax revenue is unfair.

"The evidence compels me one conclusion: the poorer the district and the greater its need, the less the money available, and the worse the education," Chief Justice Robert N. Wilentz wrote. "These students simply cannot possibly enter the same market or the same society as their peers educated in wealthier districts."

The court estimated the state needs to add $440 million to its $3.5 billion schools budget to end the disparities. Lawmakers may devise any remedy they wish but cannot force poor districts to raise property taxes, the court said.

Gov. Jim Florio called the ruling

"A clear victory for the children of New Jersey."

"The court has recognized that the current school funding system is leading us to two New Jerseys — where some youngsters head for the best colleges, and others go down a road to nowhere," he said.

The governor last week unveiled a plan to increase income taxes to raise $1 billion for more aid to middle-income and poor districts. Under the plan, aid to wealthier school systems would be reduced or eliminated.

State supreme courts in Montana, Kentucky and Texas have struck down school-funding systems in the past 18 months. Courts also have overturned funding systems in Kansas, Wisconsin, California, Connecticut, Washington, West Virginia, Wyoming and Arkansas. Lawsuits are pending in several other states, including Alaska, Connecticut and Oregon.

"I think we are re-entering a period of school finance litigation," said Chris Ficht, director of state relations for the Denver-based Education Commission of the States.

The Texas Supreme Court in October declared that state's system unconstitutional, and lawmakers have been meeting under a court order since February to devise a remedy.

Isiah steps forward for the Pistons

By Howard Uman
The Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — For one night, Detroit's team was Isiah's team again.
He stepped up when the Pistons were held by the NBA champions when Portland seemed poised to end Detroit's 13-game home playoff winning streak.

Isiah Thomas had 16 points in a 23-4 run that obliterated a 90-80 deficit and carried Detroit to a 105-99 victory over the Trail Blazers in the opener of the NBA Finals Tuesday night.

"When he's in that groove, there's nothing to do but give him the ball," Detroit's John Salley said.

Early in Thomas' nine-year NBA career, the Pistons had few others to rely on. In his first five seasons, they never got past the second playoff round. With a more balanced attack, they have reached the last three finals.

It's a different team. We have much better players," Thomas said. "This is not an individual sport like tennis, golf or swimming."

Thomas didn't have any aces, holes-in-one or splashy strokes Tuesday night. He did just about everything else. While strong team defense downed the stretch was critical to the win, Thomas was the individual star.

He had 33 points, seven rebounds and six assists in 38 minutes. On a team that hit only 34 of 91 shots, he made 13 of 27. "Isiah was tremendous," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "He made us somebody to step up and shoot it, and he made all the plays down the stretch."

Adelman would do well to pay too much attention to Thomas in Thursday night's second game of the best-of-seven series. If he does, someone else will take charge.

"Our team has a lot of guys who can step up, not one or two like other teams," Detroit guard Joe Dumars said. "That can really make it tough for the other teams to steal the ball."

NIKE — Avanti Pizza beat Mainville Nine, 10-7. Earl Lappen cracked four hits for Avanti while Dave Rutherford had three. Rob Roy, Glenn Dubois, Tony Harkins and Mike Adams added two apiece. McGwire, Reed in right spot for the Athletics, Red Sox

By Ben Walker
The Associated Press

Put any player in the right spot or spot and watch him get hot. Put someone like Mark McGwire, Tony Fernandez or Jody Reed there and watch him shine.

McGwire, playing at one of his favorite parks, hit two homers and drove in five runs Tuesday night as the Oakland Athletics won in Texas 7-4.

McGwire has hit 10 home runs at Arlington Stadium. He has connected at least once in every series he has played at the Rangers' ballpark.

McGwire's five RBIs matched his career high. He has 14 multi-homer games, four this season.

McGwire hit two-run homers off rookie Brian Bohanon (0-3) in the first and third innings, giving him 15 this year. He had a sacrifice fly in the ninth.

"McGwire's a great hitter," Bohanon said. "The only thing I'd do next time is I'd stay around the belt."

Reed's five RBIs matched his career high. He has 14 multi-homer games, four this season.

at the Smith Center in Chapel Hill. "You can only find so many neutral sites," Calhoun said philosophically. "Not that I necessarily want to visit North Carolina, but that's the only site in a building named after me. That really tells me everything I need to know."

Calhoun shouldn't complain. Last year, the Huskies whipped Maryland at the "neutral" Hartford Civic Center. Connecticut also faced ACC teams twice during the NCAA tournament, beating Clemson before losing to Duke in the NCAA East Regional final.

I told our kids that based on whom the coaches were kidding me about at the Big East meetings, they were going to get us down to the Dean Dome to play coach Calhoun and Jack Smith, who reached the Final Four. Nevertheless, I think it's good for our team, it's good for the league and good for basketball. It allows us to play against a quality team and I think that's very important."

Calhoun's a big supporter of tough, early season games. Georgetown's John Thompson isn't — when someone else is telling him where to play.

Even the second-seeded Hoyas' home court advantage against Duke at the Capital Center in Landover, Md., can't erase Thompson's grudging acceptance of the tournament.

"As I said before, I don't think these games prove anything as far as the national championship has ever been decided in December," Thompson said. "But since we are part of the Big East, we Paterno said he would seek more contracts that would guarantee more games at Beaver Stadium, which is expanding to 94,000 seats.

"If you're looking at Ohio State and Michigan, you're not going to be wanting to go out and play those games every year," he said.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Toothless woman also 'couthless'

DEAR ABBY: A rather unusual happening occurred in our department store recently. Our store is quite a tourist attraction, founded by our parents 79 years ago. One day a clerk spotted a set of dentures (false teeth) grinning at her from the table on which lingerie was displayed. After checking thoroughly with various customers who were in the store that day, we traced the dentures to a lady from San Francisco who was visiting friends in Hingham. We were able to obtain her address, so we wrote her asking if she had left her dentures in our store. She answered immediately, asking us to please send the dentures at once as she was having difficulty eating and talking. We carefully wrapped the dentures, marked the package "fragile," insured it and mailed it promptly to the lady in San Francisco.

Abby, she never acknowledged that she had received her dentures, let alone thanked us for having sent them. Reimbursement for the postage and insurance was incidental, but we did expect a note of thanks.

My question: Was it our duty to take our time and effort to locate the owner of the dentures? I can still see those teeth grinning.

Americans keep giving to charity

When statistics on how much Americans give to non-profit organizations were released, no one was surprised that they showed a healthy increase. They have done so for the past 35 years. And, in most years, the growth has outpaced inflation.

More than $104 billion in donations came from individuals, corporations, foundations and trusts in 1988. This was an increase of 6.7 percent over the previous year, according to the Trust for Philanthropy of the American Assn. of Fund-Raising Council. Most of the growth came from individual giving, which grew by 7.36 percent.

"This means that as individuals, Americans gave their money to worthy causes at a higher rate than they spent it on themselves," the AAFRC Trust reports.

Yet, more than three of four Americans, asked by the American Assn. of Fund-Raising Council, said they had not given to charity in the last year. The figure is becoming more and more difficult to know what is and isn't a responsible, legitimate charitable organization.

While most donors feel strongly about the "cause" they are supporting and have no trouble deciding to give, about 50 percent give without understanding the activities of the non-profit groups.

With billions of dollars to be had for the asking, the number of charitable organizations — and scams — has been growing, alarming legitimate charities, ethical fund-raising advisers and government officials. Even the total collected by dishonest operators is less than 1 percent of the total collected by legitimate charities. Most of the fraud is carried out by individuals.

Specific practices which legitimate organizations find objectionable include the activities of fund raisers who work on a percentage, which is as low as 10 percent of the "take" going to the nonprofit cause; sweepstake direct mailings that imply everyone wins a large amount of money; recruiting in which paid solicitors imply that they are volunteers, and coin collecting canisters bearing look-alike names that imply a relationship with national recognized groups.

In 1989, 13 states enacted tougher laws to govern fund-raising, and several other states are set to do so this year. New laws impose penalties, increase fees, require better reporting, clarify legitimate practices, ethical fund-raising advisers and government officials. Even the total collected by dishonest operators is less than 1 percent of the total collected by legitimate charities. Most of the fraud is carried out by individuals.

The person making a pre-emptive bid should hold his peace thereafter. Since the pre-emptor has described a hand with a long suit and limited defensive strength, it is right that his partner should decide whether a sacrifice is in order should the opponents bid a game. This concept is particularly applicable to a six-card suit and 8-10 high-card points. Despite all this, today's South allowed himself to be lullaxed by a favorable vulnerability into taking a phantom sacrifice.

West simply assumed that his partner's raise to four hearts was based on this would be enough to beat four spades, so he heaved. He was right. After he took the ace of hearts, the king and a diamond got him a ruff. So South was down one trick before he played K-A of spades, picking up the queen.

Poor North had to bite his tongue. He had bid three spades in the hope that East-West would foolishly bid four hearts, which he intended to deny by bidding on in violation of the principle governing pre-emptive.

Best defense against four hearts doubled is K-A of spades and then a club back for two club tricks. South ruffing the third club. Another spade led to North make the nine of hearts, and he will still score the heart king for 100. Instead South was minus 100. He must have thought he was playing with an empty chair for a partner. In this case, to find that empty chair all he had to do was look in a mirror.

In Bolton, meanwhile, New York-based Citicorp so far has lent the most mortgage money, while in Andover, Liberty Bank for Savings is the leader.

From the beginning of the year to May 10, SBM wrote 22 Manchester mortgages for a total of $2.9 million, giving it an 11 percent share of the market. The average mortgage sold by SBM was valued at $131,382.

The report ranked 47 lending institutions in Manchester for $23.2 million, with the average mortgage valued at $117,748. Conspicuously low-ranked was the Connecticut Bank & Trust Co., which has SBM has seven offices in Manchester, including its headquarters at 923 Main St., plus two branch offices in Bolton.
