HEAR AGAIN

At a Coventry Town Council meeting Monday evening, Republican Town Committee member Roland Green, a man who has been staunchly critical of the various proposed municipal budgets stood up and pointed out that his "phone has been ringing off the hook. People are sick of the way the council's been handling the budget."

And well they should be. Perhaps the council doesn't realize what it is doing. It would certainly be a better thing to plead an inability to do its job than to admit that it is blatantly and viciously ig noring the strongly-stated demands of the people

Three times now, by significant majorities, Coventry voters have rejected proposed tax hikes and proposed spending plans which the council and the Board of Education have devised. Yet no matter how many times residents have stated with their votes that the budget is too high, the council has refused to make significant cuts in order to do what most town residents want.

Moreover, after voters last week again rejected a proposed budget, the council gallingly decreed that it was jacking up the tax rate anyway — a move permissible under state law, it argued. It made that announcement the same day its inflated spending plan went down in flames.

A few weeks ago, a Herald editorial criticized leaders in Coventry and Bolton for not listening to their residents and paring spending accordingly. That editorial was reproduced on a Coventry GOP flier handed out before the budget vote last week, and we have since received a number of phone calls asserting that the editorial severely damaged the chances of getting that budget passed.

Our editorial stance is that governments should be responsive to the people. To some extent, leaders are elected for their "superior knowledge" - we certainly want leaders, after all, who can stand up against mob rule. But town officials are those residents, and three times now voters have made it clear that they do not agree that such is the

Those who blame fliers, speeches and editorials on the demise of the municipal budget are misguided. All these serve to do is to debate the point, and perhaps clarify for voters what the issues are. In this case, our editorial then — and now stresses that voters should approve a budget only when they are satisfied that it is a spending plan they agree with, and are willing to support with provided the object of derision. To any organization that would like to reproduce this editorial when the next budget is presented: go ahead, you have our permission. And to those reading this, remember: this is your town budget, providing the level of services and spending you want. You should agree with it before voting to approve it. And you should also think long and hard about whether you agree with your municipal officials, Cure for AIDS predicted most of whom apparently do not share the view that this is your budget, not theirs.

That assistance is provided through a group of volunteers who what the makeup of the charter collectively are know as the Open Door Society of Connecticut Inc. The society, the Cotters say, exists primarily to aid parents or prospective parents of children with problems - often emotional, mental, or physical or a combination. And in today's pool of potential adoptees, that's just about everyone.

"Any child that is up for adoption probably has some strikes against it, even as it lies there in the hospital bed," Linda Cotter said. She said many of the healthy babies that were adopted 20 to 30 years ago were born of single mothers, who in the present liberated society would be far more likely to keep their babies. But orphans today are often the children of 13 or 14 year-olds, who more likely are unable to bear healthy children. The same children are likely to have more problems because young mothers tend to have drug and children, and those from under-developed nations.

But the Open Door Society is not an organization devoted to dis-couraging people who want to adopt children. And the Cotters are not anti-adoption.

Jack Cotter jokes that they kept adopting until they filled every bedroom in their Mather Street home. They do have one child who is biologically their own. They speak with pride about their children's accomplishments and optimism about their futures. Linda Cotter displays several snapshots which she carries in her purse.

After celebrating the Lord's Supper together for the first time, Jesus told his disciples he had a new commandment for them. Since this command came directly from Jesus and is also in the category of last words it should have a priority among Christians. That command is ... "as I have loved you, so you must love one another." Jesus' next comment reinforces the importance of this command: "If you have love for one another, then all will know you are my disciples."

Jesus claims, that common love for Him and His love for all who follow Him should be the bond of fellowship. Love for one another is to be the distinguishing mark of enjoy a myriad of fresh fruits from many foreign countries. Here are some tips for setting aside favorite fruits for making desserts, fruit cups or salads later

A freezer should be zero degrees or lower. Small quantities freeze more quickly than bulky ones. For fastest freezing, place packed bags directly or freezer shelves with space around each bag until it freezes. Then they can be stacked.

Use cold water to wash r fruit quickly to firm the fruit and retain vitamin-containing juices. Then drain thoroughly on toweling. Pears and apples may discolor during freezing, but this can be avoided by treating the fruit with crystalline ascorbic or citric acid found in the supermarket or drugstore. Just follow package directions. Lemon juice is not as effective. Apples and rhubarb may be blanched in boiling water for two minutes to prevent discoloration. If you want fruit frozen in small amounts, place clean dry fruit on cookie sheets and freeze until solid. Portion into freezer bags and label each with a permanent marker and freezer tape. Juicy fruits like peaches are best done in a sugar pack. Make this simple by spreading fruit in a shallow baking pan, sprinkle with sugar and stir gently to coat and dissolve the sugar. Then spoon

How do I deal with the pain it causes Junior when these grandparents forget his birthday? It's not as though they didn't know it was coming. Last Christmas, I gave each member of my husband's family a large calendar with all the anniversaries circled. DEAR MOM: Had you not primed Junior to feel that he had a gift coming, he wouldn't feel the pain of disappointment. And if you want to protect Junior from the pain of disappointment, you would be wise to place less emphasis on gift-giving, which is apparently very important to you.

I suspect that your having given marked calendars to family members to "help them remember" special occasions might have been more resented than appreciated. Now would be an ideal time to teach Junior that nobody "owes" anybody a gift — so he should not expect one.

HARTFORD — If Connecticut's prison system were a by softening some punitive measures. business, its stock would be soaring — it is expanding at "They've made the segregation area a picnic," said Ed Guards also complain that they feel unsafe in the a startling pace, taking on new employees, new prisoners

But inside the prisons, there are signs of increased tension. In a recent nine-day period of turmoil, inmates Dormitory prisons cheap, rioted in Enfield, inmate gangs brawled in Somers, and a century-old wing of the Bridgeport prison burned to the

In the aftermath, Correction Commissioner Larry R. Meachum said the system and its employees had measured up well under the stress. But he acknowledged that the aggressive schedule of expansion was partly to blame, and that it continues to pose a constant challenge to the delicate peace that exists inside the prisons. "Prisons are conservative environments," Meachum said, "and anytime you have a lot of change in a short period of time, it's disruptive." Meachum, who has run prison systems in Oklahoma and Massachusetts, remains upbeat about the daunting task of running an agency that spends $250 million per year to house 9,000 inmates and keep track of another 6,000 who have been released. But he said his job lately has consisted mostly of trouble-shooting.

"It certainly feels like my life and time are being controlled, rather than me being in control," he said recently. "Whenever you have three major occurrences in two weeks, that dictates what your time and energy will be

Perhaps the biggest challenge is maintaining discipline. The system relies on hundreds of inexperienced guards who must police inmates who know that, even if they behave poorly, they will probably be released after serving just 10 percent of their sentences.

The system takes on new inmates and new prison guards almost every day. This year alone, the state plans to add 2,500 beds to the system - an average of nine new prisoners every day. By 1993, the state will have about 14,000 prison beds — up from 5,000 in 1983. The system's work force has grown to 4,900, and Meachum estimates that at least 25 percent of his staff is made up of workers in their first year on the job.

Three years from now, when the controversial supervised home-release program is phased out, all inmates will serve at least half the time they are sentenced to. "All of these things taken together produce an unset-day session of the General Assembly. But the strike spiraled out of control, and hundreds of inmates caused $3 million in damage when they rampaged through the dormitory-style complex, looting the commissary and burning buildings. In the aftermath, prison officials pointed to a number of causes, most of them related to the rapid growth of the system. To start, the population of the prison had nearly doubled in just three months, from 750 inmates to 1,360. Prison officials said the food hadn't changed at the facility, but they noted that the head chef and baker had recently retired, taking advantage of a golden handshake offer that lured many of the department's senior employees into early retirement.

Bookwalter said the new minimum-security prisons like the one at Enfield, styled like large military barracks, are particularly sensitive to rapid change. About onethird of the state's inmates live in the dormitory-style prisons. In communal living situations, when inmates lack privacy, tensions can escalate quickly, he said. He said those tensions could escalate as the prison system moves away from the early release program, and in-

Little League action is far from finished

There was a time when the Little League diamonds in the town of Manchester fell dormant after the middle of That's just about the time the middle of summer finally gets into full swing. The regular Little League season begins the end of April and comes to close the end of June. Then there's the always entertaining Town Tournament, which Boland Brothers has made personal property of the last four years, followed by the District Eight double elimination tournament in which all-star teams from the respective American and National Leagues.

Once the all-star crews were eliminated, that was it. youth of Manchester spent a good part of its time was Until three years ago.

That's when the District Eight Summer League was formed, the brainchild of Vic Helin. Helin is a man who doesn't mince words. He never met a soccer game youth or otherwise - that he liked. Youngsters, he figures, should look at a pitch, not play on one. tle League folks in Williamsport, Pa., and three teams were organized. Helin had a difference of philosophy with the hierarchy in Manchester Little League and is no longer directly involved. Don't bet against seeing him, however, at a bulk of the games at Leber Field. You'd lose badly.

Helin in body may be absent, but he more than lives in spirit. The District 8 Summer League is thriving and Manchester has five teams now involved. The schedule began on July 7 with games scheduled through Aug. 17 There are the five Manchester teams, two from Vernon, South Windsor and Ellington, one from Stafford, and three from East Hartford of District 7. "District 7 doesn't have a summer league and East Hartford asked if they could play," said Ed Dettore, Manchester Little League president. There are 125 Manchester youngsters involved. There are 28-30 players per team with the teams divided into split squads of 14-15. Each youngster gets to play an additional 10 or so games per summer. "We keep no standings or statistics. And we don't have playoffs after the schedule ends," Dettore spoke of the league's philosophy. The philosophy is a simple one - get the youngsters out on the playing diamond and get inishes up, the two Manchester squads will have at least a home-and-home series, three games minimum. And other towns have expressed interest in games once their teams are eliminated. "Enfield has called. And South Windsor has expressed interest," he said. "The more times you have a bat in your hand, or a love on your hand, the better you're going to be," said Cincinnati Reds' manager Lou Piniella in an interview ast week between games of a doubleheader with the

That's the intent of the summer league. When the summer league was first proposed, getting commitments from coaches was a problem, according to Dettore. "We could only get firm commitments from three sets of coaches," he said.

"Coaches are coming out of the woodwork," Dettore says. "There's a lot more enthusiasm. I felt after three months of baseball they'd be drained. But that's not the case. And those not coaching are helping out in other The five head coaches are Bob Young, Joe Marquez,

Bob Johnson, Ken Toner and Gary Cogan, Each has at east one assistant. Johnson is serving as coordinator for the Manchester clubs this summer, and Johnson is doing one terrific job, if you ask Dettore. "He (Johnson) is really gung ho about it. He was on vacation, but came back two days from the beach. He makes a ton of phone calls (every night)."

Why the increased interest? "I think the interest has always been there," Dettore says, "but I think we low-keyed it in the past. This year we asked every kid if they wanted to play. The only requirement is they had to be on a Little League roster at he start of the year."

The one negative that can be pulled out of the expanded play is the rosters are too large. Maybe having veryone play is not a good thing all of the time. Still, Dettore sees plenty of benefits. "It has to help the kids. The biggest thing is

UConn looking for opponent

STORRS - The University of Connecticut basketball team, which stirred up a lot of excitement in 1989-90 with its first ever Big East Conference title and berth in the NCAA East Regional final, has been promised a date on CBS for next season.

The Huskies, however, are looking for an opponent. It's believed Connecticut will be in the national limelight on Feb. 16 with a 4 p.m. game at Gampel Pavilion. But CBS is having difficulty lining up an opponent, Husky coach Jim Calhoun said Tuesday. North Carolina State appears to be the likely opponent.

Last week it appeared Missouri would be UConn's opponent but the Tigers were eliminated by CBS after published reports surfaced that Missouri coach Norm Stewart lied to NCAA investigators during an investigation into the Missouri program.

Aparo may be retried as youthful offender New trial might be private

The Associated Press HARTFORD - Karin Aparo, the teen-ager who has spent much of the past three years in the glare of intense media coverage, now faces a second trial on charges that she conspired to kill her mother. But if Aparo's lawyers have their way, the second trial will be held in private if it is held at all. Hartford State's Attorney John Bailey moved Wednesday to retry the teen-ager on murder-conspiracy charges in her mother's 1987 death.
