The fuel-air explosives create a huge fireball and shock wave over a concentrated area, but without the radiation fallout associated with nuclear weapons, the newspaper says.

The explosives have 10 times the power of conventional explosives and could devastate oil fields, air bases and troops, the

Teach preteens sex isn't play

DEAR ABBY: My 11-year-old daughter (I'll call her Cindy) just told me that her girlfriend (I'll call her Debbie) told her that she and her boyfriend had had sex. Debbie and her boyfriend are both 11 years old! Debbie made Cindy promise not to tell anybody, so I had to swear on my honor that I wouldn't say or do anything

Abby, I'm afraid NOT to do anything about it, but if I break my promise to my daughter and she finds out about it, it will ruin the wonderful, close mother-daughter relationship we have always had.

I don't know what to do. Cindy told me the boy's name. If I send it to you, will you intervene? Or should I make an anonymous telephone call to the kids' school or to the police - and let them deal with this?

SMALL TOWN, U.S.A. DEAR SMALL TOWN: This is not the business of the school or the police; it's the business of Debbie's and her boyfriend's parents. Assuming that what your daughter told you is true, punishment is not the solution.

Debbie and her boyfriend need to realize that sex is not all fun and games; along with sex should be commitment and responsibility - far beyond the intellectual and financial capabilities of two 11-year-olds. Since you and your daughter enjoy such a close relationship, urge her to try to persuade Debbie to confide in her own mother - or even in you if she can't bring herself to discuss this with her mother. She needs an adult friend she can talk to. And so does her

Anyone who doubts that two 11-year-olds can produce a baby, or contract a venereal disease, should get in touch with the nearest United Way or family planning clinic. Regrettably, it can - and does - happen.

DEAR ABBY: Concerning graves that are neglected and void of flowers: I wonder how many people would go to the trouble and spend the time and money to keep up a grave if they were sure nobody else would see it? NASHVILLE CRITIC

Colon surgery needs aftercare

DEAR DR. GOTT: My husband had his upper large bowel removed because of cancer. As a result, he has no control and cannot even leave home. His doctor says this is normal for about six months following surgery, yet it's

DEAR READER: The large intestine (colon) permits fluid from the bowel contents to be re-absorbed back into the body, leaving waste material that is relatively dry. When portions of the colon are surgically removed, less water is re-absorbed and the stools remain loose. This causes frequent diarrhea that may be difficult to control. With time, your husband's intestine will learn to compensate for the missing segment and, although his stools may never return to normal, they will at least become firmer and controllable. In the meantime, ask his doctor to prescribe a constipating agent, such as paregoric,

DEAR READER: Endometriosis, the presence of abnormal collections of uterine cells in locations other than the uterine lining, can cause abdominal pain, painful intercourse and partial bowel obstruction. Over time, the continued irritation from these cells leads to scar tissue I am not clear why you need a hysterectomy. This seems like a drastic solution for a woman your age, who may wish to have children. I suggest you obtain a second opinion from another gynecologist. Perhaps medical therapy, such as the temporary use of birth control pills, would — by stopping menstruation alleviate your symptoms. This medicine often suppresses endometriosis and may permit you to take the time to make an informed decision about which you can feel comfortable. You may not need a hysterectomy unless your symptoms are unmanageable and cannot be controlled with hormones. Also, laparoscopic surgery, performed through a small abdominal incision, is often used to treat endometriosis; this might be an option for you to In my opinion, the chance of depression would be minimal from the hysterectomy itself. Rather, I'm more choices open by exploring other alternatives To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "An Informed Approach To

Abortion pill testers ready in California

By LAURA MYERS he Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - State health authorities are ready to approve the only American testing of the French abortion pill, but the makers of RU-486 continue to withhold the drug, officials said

"After all the negative publicity, the French manufacturer pulled back the drug. That holds things up," explained Scott Lewis, spokesman for the California Department of Health

Lewis said state law prevents him from confirming the status of the drug testing application by doctors at the University of California at San Francisco. But Dr. Marcus Conant, one of the leaders of the group that wants to test the pill, said state regulators have "told us our application looks really good."

"They have indicated a willingness to approve our testing protocol for RU-486, but they need information that only the company can provide," Conant said. "And we need access to the drug," Testing of RU-486 has been backed by such groups as Planned Parenhood, but opposed by anti-abortion oups that have threatened to oycott other products the French ompany makes if RU-486 becomes vailable in the United States. The drug, which is used in the first seven weeks of pregnancy and under a doctor's care, causes miscarriage by preventing fertilized eggs

"Sports," my junior high school gym teacher used to say, "are a metaphor for life." And I believed him - even though I wasn't exactly sure what a "metaphor" was. I figured it meant that life is meant for sports and sports are meant for life. Or something like that.

But now I think I know what he was trying to say (including the probability that he intended "simile" when he said "metaphor"). And to tell you the truth, I sort of wish he was more right about this than he was when he said "deep knee bends are good for you" and "wind sprints can be fun."

I mean, if the real world was like the sporting world, an easier time telling good guys from the bad guys because they'd be wearing different colored shirts;

But those setbacks have not shown up on the personal financial reports that Holloway, as a member of Congress, is required by law to put on file for public nspection. Instead, his reports simply hint at a few losses in his plant nursery ousiness back home.

Holloway's case points out the holes financial disclosure rules imposed on Congress. Some financial problems, such as tax delinquencies, aren't required to be reported on the disclosure forms, according to the House Ethics Committee. The result is that members of Congress go through the motions of telling the public about their personal business leals, but keep the full truth to themselves. Voters must find out through the grapevine if the lawmaker is up to something that might be a conflict of interest. Since members of Congress can't eem to make ends meet on their salaries. they have a right to make a living on the side, but a growing number of them have gotten in trouble mixing business and politics without telling the voters.

Rep. Denny Smith, R-Ore., now faces an ethics inquiry over his role in the savings and loan scandal. The focus of the probe will be Smith's efforts to keep the government from going after himself and other directors of a thrift that later Rep. Curt Weldon, R-Pa., has been ac-

The company defaulted on the loan, but the bank never came to Holloway to collect. Holloway told us that he insisted that his guarantee of the loan stay on the books as proof of his integrity. He now admits that he made a mistake in backing the deal, but he said he thought the vegetable

"I don't look for anything in return in politics." He did admit, however, that the people he backed in the vegetable business had once sponsored a political event

Holloway's mixing of personal and federal business includes the $500,000 emergency business loan he qualified for from the Farmer's Home Loan Administration. His nursery, like others in Louisiana, suffered setbacks from a freeze last winter.

But unlike the other nursery owners, Holloway sits on a congressional committee that oversees the Farmers Home Loan Administration. He told us he never used his influence to get the loan.

Rearming Japan
Demands from the United States for to talk about rearming itself. The Japanese postwar constitution bans the use of Japanese forces in international disputes. But Japan relies heavily on Persian Gulf oil and the Bush administration wants Japan's money if not its forces to fight for that oil. Hard-liners in Japan would like to restore their country's military might, and they are beginning to argue behind closed doors that Japan must build up its defense forces to defend its new wealth.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development has to be the worst real-estate agency in the business. HUD sells about 80,000 foreclosure homes each year and loses about $23,000 on every sale. The federal government would be better off just giving the houses away as soon as it gets them.
