Political chaos inside Iraq delays action

By RICHARD PYLE
The Associated Press

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — After two days of uncertainty, a Red Cross aircraft carrying the remains of 14 allied dead from Operation Desert Storm arrived in Saudi Arabia from Baghdad today, the U.S. military command said.

Red Cross officials said political strife in Iraq had complicated efforts to repatriate hundreds of Iraqi prisoners of war. There was no word on when the POWs would be repatriated.

The U.S. command said the 14 allied dead, contained in stainless steel military shipping caskets, were taken to a U.S. Army mortuary at Dhahran for preliminary identification and turned over to the appropriate governments.

Delays in the repatriation of the allied remains and the return of Iraqi POWs were chiefly the result of "political chaos inside Iraq," said one Red Cross official.

The International Committee of the Red Cross did not list the nationalities of the dead, but the Pentagon said at least one was said to be a Navy flier shot down over Iraq, with five others reported to be British.

The other eight were not identified by nationality. U.S. officials say the bodies will be taken to a U.S. military mortuary at Dhahran for preliminary identification and turned over to the appropriate governments.

U.S. wary of Syria's Assad

By RUTH SINAI
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States learned — the hard way — the danger of cozying up to dictators when Iraqi President Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait last August and flouted nine years of alliance with the West.

U.S. officials say they'll be more careful with Saddam's neighbor, Syrian President Hafez Assad, who signed the anti-Iraq coalition last summer. But for now, the administration appears to have adopted the Arab maxim that "my enemy of my enemy is my friend."

Officials say they have few illusions about Assad, but they also view him as a key player in attempts to reduce Middle Eastern tensions, obtain the release of Western hostages in Lebanon, provide a long-term deterrent to Iraq and bring about peace between Israelis and Arabs.

The Bush administration has accused Assad of providing a home to some of the world's most vicious terrorists, of executing dissidents and torturing prisoners, of manufacturing hundreds of tons of poison gas every year.

And on the eve of today's visit to Damascus by Secretary of State James A. Baker III, officials said Syria took delivery of 20 launchers and two dozen North Korean-made Scud missiles which easily could reach neighboring Israel, possibly with chemical warheads.

Some observers fear the Bush administration will do the same with Assad as it did with Saddam, whom the United States supported in Iraq's long war with Iran.

They pulled up next to Saddam Hussein, called him an ally, and pretended he wasn't a bad guy," said Jack Healey, director of the U.S. section of Amnesty International.

"They'll end up with exactly the same thing with Assad," the human rights monitor warned.

Healey said Syrian torture methods were so ingenious in their cruelty that Syria has become "almost a research center for torture."

The London-based Amnesty has counted 35 methods cited by victims, among them the so-called Syrian chair which snaps the spine of anyone strapped into it, he said.

The United States has pressed Syria to reform, and human rights officials say the number of prisoner disappearances and executions has diminished in recent years.

It peaked in 1982 when Syrian troops dove tanks into the town of Hama looking for members of the fundamentalist Muslim Brotherhood who had killed some soldiers. The Syrians razed buildings and sealed up others, gassing those inside with cyanide.

Estimates of the dead ranged from 10,000 to 25,000.

The State Department says Syria still allows radical Palestinian groups to operate out of its territory, and the country remains on a list of seven countries ineligible for U.S. aid and most trade because of their support for terrorism.

Arabs steady market

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the aftermath of the Persian Gulf War, Saudi Arabia will work to blunt sudden, sharp price increases and help stabilize the oil markets, Bush administration officials suggest.

But while the administration expects better relations with members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the White House is not pushing for cheap oil, either.

A decision Tuesday by OPEC ministers meeting in Geneva to cut oil production by about 1 million barrels a day in an attempt to prop up sagging prices was met by indifference in Washington. One official said it was expected.

While some OPEC members, including Iran, had sought much steeper production cuts, Saudi Arabia had argued strongly for more modest reductions. Saudi Arabia dramatically increased production to 8.4 million barrels a day last year to make up for oil lost from Kuwait and Iraq.

OPEC has been producing about 23.6 million barrels a day and has agreed to pare it back by 1 million barrels during the April-June quarter when demand is expected to be soft.

Even so, energy analysts questioned whether the OPEC producers will be able to push up prices to their informal target of $21 a barrel. Oil closed at $19.68 a barrel Tuesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, up 69 cents.

Ambassador seeks asylum

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The Iraqi ambassador has asked for political asylum in Spain, the Foreign Ministry said today, and a newspaper said the action could be part of a wider move by Iraqi diplomats to isolate Saddam Hussein.

Over the weekend, Arshad Tawfiq Ismail turned over weapons to police and burned documents in the garden of his Madrid Embassy before requesting asylum and going into hiding under police protection, the daily ABC reported Tuesday.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman confirmed the request but said the process of determining whether it would be granted would be "relatively long."

He would not comment on the reports the ambassador handed over weapons or that Tawfiq Ismail's wife, Mouzar Hassan Mahmoud Al Taie, and four children ages 20, 18, 13 and 11, were also included in the asylum request.

The embassy was unable or unwilling to provide any information on the ambassador's whereabouts. ABC said it had been unable to confirm the type or quantity of weapons the ambassador turned over to police.

He said Spanish security and intelligence officials suspected the Iraqi Embassy was "an active espionage center," but did not elaborate.

The ambassador had been an outspoken critic of Spain's support for the U.S.-led coalition during the Persian Gulf crisis.

ABC indicated that the government hoped for information from the ambassador about Iraqi espionage and possible terrorist networks in Spain or elsewhere in Europe in exchange for granting him asylum.

Spouses tax IRS patience

By DAVID E. KALISH
The Associated Press

Many military families are mistakenly using the Persian Gulf War to claim deductions they aren't eligible for — often at the advice of professional tax preparers, the Internal Revenue Service says.

The mistakes could result in IRS penalties and interest fees.

"When you talk about small communities such as military bases, rumors and bad information can spread rather quickly," said Judith Golden, a spokeswoman at the IRS office in Laguna Niguel, Calif., which oversees most of Southern California outside of Los Angeles.

In many instances, Golden said, the Desert Storm spouses said tax preparers told them to check off the "head of household" box on their federal return because their husbands or wives were stationed overseas.

"Head of household" status can result in larger deductions. In addition, filers were led to believe they would get refunds more quickly if they filed separately instead of waiting for their spouses to return from the Persian Gulf to sign a joint return, she said.

Filers qualifying as a "head of household" must be separated from their spouses for more than six months and prove they intentionally are living apart — as opposed to a separation forced by military call-up, according to Golden.

What's more, taxpayers don't have to wait for their spouses to return in order to file "married filing jointly."

That's because activated reservists and other personnel signed power-of-attorney forms before they left for the gulf. By including a copy, taxpayers can file "married filing jointly" without their spouse's signature.

In January, Congress voted to give military personnel six months after leaving the combat zone to file their 1990 taxes without penalty or interest charges.

In addition, the IRS will speed up processing of forms that stipulate the filer has a relative in the Persian Gulf.

COLD STEEL ON ICE — An unidentified stroller walks past the Picasso in downtown Chicago during a winter storm Tuesday night.

The blizzard conditions hitting northern Illinois will slow the return of some Persian Gulf troops.

Blizzards kill one in Midwest

(AP) — Blizzards hit the Midwest, winds whipped up Kansas dust and Western ski resorts were blessed with snow. Meanwhile, an ice storm in New York claimed its first victim: a woman who died after more than a week without heat.

People in more than 11,000 homes today were in their 10th day without heat or electricity after an ice storm hit Rochester, N.Y.

Norma Messerschmidt, 73, who had been without power since the March 3 storm, was found dead of exposure in her apartment Monday, authorities said.

The state Public Service Commission is investigating Rochester Gas & Electric's handling of the storm, which downed electric lines, utility poles and transformers. More than 300,000 customers were without power at some point.

Meanwhile, a strong low pressure system brought snow, rain and high winds to much of the Midwest on Tuesday.

In Kansas, gusts of nearly 90 mph darkened the sky with dust, eroding soil and threatening wheat crops. Roads and schools were forced to close.

"It looks like the Nebraska Panhandle is going by right now," said Don Kueck, extension agent for Reno County.

Substitute steroid makers indicted

The Food and Drug Administration has received 70 reports of adverse reactions from use of the drug, including six comas, said FDA Commissioner David Keating. Other side effects include seizures, depressed and irregular breathing, severe stomach pain and a drop in blood pressure.

"This is a potent drug with serious side effects. It must not be used without medical supervision," Keating said. He called it a "powerful and rapid hypnotic" with mind-altering capabilities.

GHB is sold as a powder, usually either dry or mixed with a liquid. A 100-gram bottle sells for about $25 to $30, officials said. It is promoted, often by word of mouth, through gyms, sports trainers, coaches and other athletes and athletic facilities, Gerson said. It also may be on the shelves, or in the back rooms, of health food stores or sold through sports magazines and mail order outlets, he said.

"They're made to look like legal products," he said. "In a number of communities, there is something of an open market for these sorts of drugs."

The FDA issued an alert last November about GHB, urging consumers not to use it.

Law enforcement and public health officials are concerned that more attempts are being made to market substitute steroids as a result of stiffer penalties enacted last month.

Power sought to oust chief

By JEFF WILSON
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Mayor Tom Bradley is using the police beating of a motorist as an opportunity to seek more control over city department heads, including a police chief who has a lifetime appointment.

At a news conference Tuesday, Bradley said he wants a city charter amendment that would make Police Chief Daryl F. Gates among officials subject to performance review every five years and possible dismissal.

At the same time, a grand jury met for the second day in its investigation of police officers present at the beating of Rodney G. King following a high-speed chase. A by-stander's chance video recording of the March 3 incident was shown on news programs nationally and caused an uproar, including calls for the police chief's ouster.

The 23-member secret panel heard testimony from four people, two of whom witnessed the beating. The Los Angeles Times reported today.

Bradley urged the City Council to put his proposal to voters, he said. It was not clear why they were there.

Authorities said King, 25, was stopped after a chase by the California Highway Patrol exceeding 100 mph.

Students urging hostage release

COARSEBOLD, Calif. (AP) — Sally Marshall never even heard of Terry Anderson until her sixth-grade teacher described the plight of the Associated Press correspondent taken hostage in Beirut six years ago Saturday.

But Sally knows what she thinks about him now.

"Few things are free in this world, but Terry Anderson should be one of them."

Teacher Rick Cano asked Sally and the rest of her class at Coarsebold School about 250 miles southeast of San Francisco to write to Beirut newspapers telling why Anderson — the longest-held hostage in Lebanon — should be freed.

Their letters showed the simple honesty of children 11 and 12 years old, and sometimes their poignancy and innocent humor.

"This whole thing is unfair, painful and stressful for his family," wrote Aleena Scott. "In the Bible, it says, Do unto others as you would them to do unto you."

"His family is in need, his health is terrible, and why are they doing this?" asked Melissa Pung. "I wish someone would stop them from doing this. Terry Anderson is suffering. He needs help."

Sophie Frost advised the Beirut editor that although many may have forgotten Anderson, "well, Mr. Cano's class hasn't. Our class doesn't even know him, but we are concerned. We all want him home. He needs a real life, real food. He needs his family."

Floods kill many

BLANTYRE, Malawi (AP) — Flash floods in southeast Malawi have left at least 153 people dead and thousands homeless, the government said today.

The flooding followed freak rainstorms Sunday, regional administrator Stewart Winga told the official Malawi News Agency. He said the death toll was expected to rise.

The flood waters, covering an area of about 200 square miles, swept away roads, several bridges and an unspecified number of brick houses and traditional mud-built dwellings about 45 miles southeast of Blantyre.

Winga said the government was appealing to relief agencies for help in providing food, shelter and medical supplies for the flood victims.

OPINION

Open Forum Charges false

To the Editor:

False accusations have been made recently regarding CASE (Citizens' Alliance for School Excellence). Inferences have been made to suggest that we were responsible for the firing of Charlie Holland as a deputy sheriff. I am a CASE member and I am outraged that people writing these lies could do so knowingly. I could, perhaps, forgive them if I believed that they were unaware of the truth, but this is not the case. Ted Salkowski said definitively that he did not receive any phone calls from CASE members regarding Charlie Holland. Such actions have never been considered by CASE nor would they make any sense. Engaging in such activities would imply that the removal of Charlie Holland as deputy sheriff would somehow improve the quality of the Bolton school system. How absurd. Once again, TNT is trying to gather sympathy for themselves at the expense of others.

Ivi Cannon wrote that we tried to interfere with her salary increase. CASE members were not involved in any conspiracy against her. CASE does not use personal vendettas to achieve their goals. This tactic is not one that CASE utilizes. We would consider efforts of this nature by any group to be despicable.

It is my hope that the coming months of political activity in Bolton are not marred by smear campaigns such as TNT tried to accomplish. The issues facing Bolton voters are difficult and serious ones which should be considered on their own. The Bolton community will not benefit from false and malicious campaign tactics.

Mother of parties

To the Editor:

With regard to our forces in the Gulf, there is no doubt that we are enjoying enormous pride. Patriotism has once again become the order of the day. Maybe their pride will trickle down into our communities.

Having been glued to the coverage and commentaries, I am struck by a number of observations. First of all, the brilliance of General Powell and Schwarzkopf's strategy as well as their humility. General Schwarzkopf and Neal in their briefings frequently referred to our ground forces and the Iraqi forces as people. Although this was a high tech engagement, referring to troops as people somehow humanized this great drama.

As for our troops, never did I hear them use slang or worse to describe the enemy. They behaved in an exemplary manner. They really deserve the heroes welcome many have planned.

I can't help but think that the absence of drugs and alcohol, God's grace and the example of our leaders brought out the best that all people possess. The fact that these were enlisted men and women made for a collective positive mental attitude.

Their bravery and willingness to put their lives on the line to ultimately make the world a better place for all people, lessens the likelihood that future generations will have to do battle. May we throw them the mother of all parties.

Berry's World

"Oh, I've always been sort of peace oriented," she explained, adding that she thought she bought the jewelry even before the symbol began to enjoy a resurgence in contemporary fashion.

Our conversation progressed from the visible symbols she wore to her feelings, and she related how uncomfortable she felt covering recent "troop support" rallies where some participants openly expressed their hatred of "pacifists."

We then began to talk about the difference in supporting our soldiers and supporting the war, and I told her my feelings about having used the soldiers who fought in Vietnam as scapegoats for our national confusion and for all that went wrong in that war.

Her gaze changed from one of polite interest to irritation and her eyes narrowed. "I don't feel sorry for the troops," she told me. "They knew what they were doing when they signed up—that they might have to go to war."

It was clear she had it all figured out: War is wrong, so anybody who fights in one doesn't deserve any special consideration, and perhaps even deserves our disdain.

The thought process was familiar. I had used it two decades earlier to come to terms with the question of war and the people who fought them. Oh, to be 21 again and have so many of the answers figured out!

How simple and reassuring it was. It took me years of looking at life from other people's perspectives, of being forced to walk in their shoes or at least shoes similar enough to feel the same pinches on the same toes, to realize how complicated seemingly simple decisions are.

Brady versus NRA

By JACK ANDERSON
and DALE VAN ATTA

WASHINGTON — A camera crew set up shop one evening a few weeks ago near a bridge just two blocks from the U.S. Capitol, and they waited for actor Charlton Heston to arrive.

Heston's latest starring role is in commercials for the National Rifle Association, in which he shows the seamy side of Washington, D.C., and makes his point — that the nation's capital is also the murder capital. And if they have guns, why should you?

Except there isn't much within eyeshot of the Capitol that is seamy enough to make the NRA's point. So while the crew waited for Heston to arrive, they added some cosmetic touches. They chalked graffiti on the bridge support and added an eery mist — the kind of thing that middle America expects to find in a ghetto.

Heston arrived and taped an ad similar to one that he did three years ago. He walked in front of the bridge support, which, thanks to Madison Avenue, looked like a moldy, vandalized wall of a tenement building. Washington is still the murder capital of the nation, and law-abiding citizens are taking the heat for it, Heston said. Criminals, not guns, are the problem. Citizens are being disarmed while criminals rule the streets. Then Heston walked past the end of the bridge support and the Capitol loomed in the background.

The ad makes the neighborhood around the Capitol look like murder central, but it was taped in a relatively safe neighborhood. When our associate Scott Sleek asked the NRA about the creative license, a spokesman said it was done to "enhance what was already there."

Why the media blitz now? Because the NRA is doing battle with a formidable opponent, James Brady. He was Ronald Reagan's press secretary on March 30, 1981, when Reagan and his entourage emerged from a Washington hotel and met a barrage of bullets from the gun of John Hinckley. One bullet pierced Brady's skull and set his brain on fire, crippling him and created a life-long advocate for gun control.

Ten years later, Brady and his wife, Sarah, are doggedly pressing Congress for a gun-control law called the "Brady Bill." It would require a seven-day waiting period for handgun purchases so police could check the buyer's background. The Bradys are joined by handgun control law, a public interest lobby, in their campaign to get the bill through Congress.

Congress has been gun-shy about passing the bill because of intense lobbying by the NRA. House Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., has said he will allow the Brady Bill to pass on the House floor. Gun-control crusaders hope that day comes by March 30, the 10th anniversary of the shooting.

Even though the bill will see the light of day outside of a House committee, it faces an uphill fight. The NRA's political action committee has spent millions of dollars in campaign contributions across Congress.

The gun-control lobby doesn't have the resources that the NRA has, and can't match a media blitz. But the movement has mounted an ad campaign. One magazine ad features a picture of Brady in his wheelchair and the headline, "This handgun statistic just broke his silence."

The gun-control lobby claims the Brady Bill could save thousands of lives, and tens of thousands of head injuries, but that Congress is afraid of alienating the NRA and its money.

Deja vu

History may repeat itself in the Persian Gulf. Opposition to Iran's late Ayatollah Khomeini led President Reagan to support Iraq. Saddam Hussein. Now opposition to Saddam has led President Bush to make friends with Syria's Hafez al-Assad, who in some ways makes Khomeini and Saddam look like Boy Scouts. Our intelligence sources warn that Assad is likely to become the next enemy to Middle Eastern peace. He is already dicker with Moscow to buy modified Scud missiles.

Min-Editorial

Why has every modern American president been willing to spill blood for oil? Because energy runs right after air, water and food as vital to the welfare of the world. No president could allow a ruthless tyrant to control the flow of oil, and that is exactly what Saddam Hussein had in mind when he sent his army into Kuwait. The cry of the anti-war movement has been "no blood for oil." That's a reasonable demand. President Bush didn't have the luxury of ignoring Saddam's invasion because right now the United States depends heavily on oil. So Bush should not be blamed. But his recently unveiled national energy strategy shows that he is no more willing to change that dependence than any of his predecessors were. And for that

Other hostages remembered

By WALTER R. MEARS
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a season of celebration for the freed prisoners and returning veterans of the Persian Gulf War, it's time for another sort of ceremony, a bleak one at the sixth anniversary of Terry Anderson's captivity in Lebanon.

The contrast is jarring.

In the conflict over Kuwait, the one potent demand of his kidnappers was ransomed money. The Muslim extremists who seized Anderson on March 16, 1985, demanded the release of fellow Shiites imprisoned by Kuwait for terrorist bombings there. The last of them was freed when Iraq invaded on Aug. 2.

Syria, which joined the U.S.-led coalition against Iraq, is the dominant force in Lebanon, a position strengthened during the Persian Gulf crisis. The Syrian army controls the region where the hostages are believed held by pro-Iranian Muslim factions grouped together as Hezbollah, or the Party of God. Iran remained officially neutral in the war that drove Iraq from Kuwait.

Anderson has been held hostage for 2,187 days.

War protesters reconciled?

Recently, I was talking to a journalist 18 years younger than I am, and I noticed she was wearing a silver peace symbol ring and necklace. When I was her age, the Vietnam War was still raging and I wore a copper bracelet bearing the name of an American prisoner of war. I asked the young woman about her jewelry.

"Oh, I've always been sort of peace oriented," she explained, adding that she thought she bought the jewelry even before the symbol began to enjoy a resurgence in contemporary fashion.

Our conversation progressed from the visible symbols she wore to her feelings, and she related how uncomfortable she felt covering recent "troop support" rallies where some participants openly expressed their hatred of "pacifists."

about the soldiers serving in Vietnam is something I'll regret the rest of my life. I did nothing overt to express any disapproval of them, but the "moral" conclusion I reached — that they were simply wrong — helped to create the cold, accusatory atmosphere to which they returned. Such a tragedy.

When I was 21 years old, I lacked the ability to stand in those men's shoes and sort through the many elements influencing them: their love for their country and belief in its ideals, the prospect of possibly losing their lives or being terribly maimed, the alternative of having to give up all the rights and benefits of this country if they disagreed with war, or reached at this point," Rehmann said. "The terms are in the best interests of the people of Alaska." State Attorney General Charles Cole had said last week that the proposed settlement would be for about $1.2 billion.

Sporkin, in clearing the way for the signing of a settlement, issued an order Tuesday intended to protect the villages' rights to pursue their own damages against Exxon. The villages filed suit last week, contending the government was negotiating away their right to seek damages from Exxon without allowing them to participate.

"The government, I think, understands that they cannot play fast and loose with your rights," Sporkin told the villages' attorneys during a hearing. "This may well be a settlement that is outstanding... This is not a situation where anybody's going to get out on the cheap."

In a stern warning to government attorneys, Sporkin said that if a settlement did wind up harming the villages' right to sue Exxon, "Hell hath no fury like a judge scorned... It's not fair, it's not right and it's not American."

The judge said he would not require the government and Exxon to submit any settlement for a court consent decree, but he said he was keeping jurisdiction of the villages' lawsuit.

"I feel much better, I had a sleepless night last night," said Elenore McMullen, chief of the village of Port Graham, one of the plaintiffs. Asked whether she felt confident the villages' rights now would be protected, she said, "I feel pretty sure they will be."

The villages' attorney, Michael D. Hausfeld, said he was pleased with Sporkin's decision. If any settlement does damage the villages' rights, he said, "I think the federal government and the state of Alaska will have one angry judge on their hands."

Federal law gives the villages the right to "subsidize off the natural resources of their ancestral lands," which their lawsuit said includes areas at Prince William Sound. A similar lawsuit was filed by three native Alaskan corporations that will control thousands of acres of land to be turned over to the villages by the government under an unratified agreement.

Eleven million gallons of oil gushed from the tanker Exxon Valdez after it ran aground March 24, 1989. The spill killed countless birds, mammals and fish and disrupted Alaska's lucrative fisheries.

The villages — Chenega Bay, Port Graham, English Bay, Larsen Bay and Karluk — have about 3,000 to 5,000 native Alaskan residents.

"From the shape of the skull and the build of the femur, it looks like a moderate-sized herbivore (plant eater)," said Hammer. The animal, he said, was about 25 feet long, which makes it moderate in size, as dinosaurs go.

Hammer said his team used jackhammers to crack away the fossil-bearing rock and then a helicopter flew large chunks to the Antarctic coast.

"The fossils are now among 4,000 pounds of rock on a boat in the middle of the Pacific," he said. Eventually it will be directed in a large laboratory at Augustana College, where Hammer and an assistant will spend up to two years slowly removing rock clinging to the fossils.

found elsewhere." The fossils were embedded in a rock called mudstone that was laid down by a river. At some later point, the area was uplifted with the creation of a 15,000-foot peak called Mount Kirkpatrick.

Baker

White Baker was enroute to Syria, Bassam Abu Sharif, chief political adviser to PLO chief Yasser Arafat, was quoted as saying the PLO will accept a Palestinian state comprising something less than the complete West Bank and Gaza Strip and is dropping its demand to negotiate with Israel on an equal footing.

The remarks were reported by Sky News and the British Broadcasting Corp. in London. However, Abu Sharif later said the statements attributed to him were "absolutely not true." Israel dismissed the remarks and PLO headquarters in Tunisia sought to distance itself from them.

In other developments: Police in Jerusalem announced two hours after Baker's departure that they were hitting roadblocks that barred Palestinians from entering Jerusalem since Sunday's fatal stabbings of four Israeli women by a Palestinian from the occupied Gaza Strip.

After two days of uncertainty, a Red Cross aircraft carrying the remains of 14 allied dead from Operation Desert Storm arrived in Saudi Arabia from Baghdad, the U.S. military command in Riyadh said.

Red Cross officials said political strife in Iraq had complicated efforts to have the bodies returned, as well as to repatriate hundreds of Iraqi prisoners of war.

Iraqi opposition leaders complained about a lack of international support for their revolt and contended that Saddam could survive the uprising.

The leaders from 23 opposition factions met privately in Beirut to prepare the final declaration on their three-day conference, but sources said efforts to form a unified command or a government-in-exile likely will be postponed. An Associated Press poll found that Americans are split evenly on whether to apply more pressure on Israel to negotiate with the Palestinians.

The poll of 1,005 adults questioned by telephone Wednesday through Sunday found a 42-to-42 percent split on applying more pressure on Israel to talk with the Palestinians.

Baker is touring the Middle East trying to sell Arabs and Israel on President Bush's formula for a Mideast settlement — that Israel relinquish land in order to gain the acceptance of its Arab neighbors.

The senior official, who demanded anonymity, told reporters they "could assume" Baker raised the land-for-peace approach with Shamir. They met for 75 minutes and, in an unusual flourish of secret diplomacy, excluded even note-takers from most of the one-on-one discussion in Shamir's office. By contrast, Baker's meeting with 10 Palestinians was widely publicized by American and Palestinian participants.

Baker called the meeting with the Palestinians in the home of U.S. Consul General Philip Wilcox a "window of opportunity."

Reisal Hussein, a spokesman for the delegation, said "we told him we are here because Yasser Arafat told us to be here." Hussein is widely regarded as the leading PLO supporter on the West Bank.

The group presented Baker with an 11-point memorandum reaffirming that "the PLO is our sole legitimate leadership and interlocutors, embodying the national identity and expressing the will of the Palestinian people everywhere."

The Bush administration a year ago suspended U.S. talks with the PLO on grounds it was still carrying out terrorist attacks against Israel.

limiting the use of the capital reserve fund to capital projects. Pelletier said that in recent years the fund has been used to artificially reduce the tax rate instead of saving for future projects.

The candidates also want to separate the budget to reflect operating and capital expenditures. That way, they said, the administration would be able to show taxpayers the true cost of running the town as opposed to the cost of building and maintaining the town.

The Democrats are also suggesting that the selection serve four-year, staggered terms instead of the current two-year terms.

Pelletier said that by the time a new selectman has learned how the town operates, his or her term is up. The four-year terms would allow selectmen to really get involved in town programs. Most of the other elected and appointed boards in the town already have four-year terms.

to achieve progress in a month's time and Saddam became weaker, the world might change its opinion. Then we'll meet again and discuss the new options," the source added.

The 325 delegates at the 23 factions represented in Beirut include fundamentalist Shiite Muslims, Communists, Kurds and Arab nationalists.

Pro-Iranian Shiite factions want to establish an Islamic republic if Saddam is toppled. The Kurds, mostly Sunni Muslims, want autonomy in their province in Iraq's northern mountains. The Arab nationalists want a democratic, secular government that represents all factions.

of town pension funds in a Merus Corp., a Denver blood bank that failed.

Under Oella's plan, the treasurer would continue to retain such statutory functions as depositing funds and disbursing pension checks.

"We'd still end up with an elected part-time treasurer and an appointed part-time assistant treasurer." Currently the office has an elected part-time treasurer, a full-time assistant, and a full-time and part-time clerk.

Oella made his proposal after a discussion of absenteeism in the treasurer's office. Negro's full-time assistant, Ruth Stann, and his full-time office clerk, Helen Tazewick, have been on extended absences and Negro had borrowed about two hours of time from one member of the payroll department and four hours from another member of that department.

The issue, raised by Republicans, was called nothing more than another round of politically-motivated attacks lodged by Republicans against the Democratic treasurer.

New firehouse suggested for S. Main St.

By RICK SANTOS
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — Republican Deputy Mayor Ronald Oella has asked the town's administration to study an area off South Main Street to see if the location is fit for a new firehouse.

The site, which is just southeast of South Main and Interstate 384 ramps, was rejected in the past because the elevation of the land would require substantial fill to raise it to a usable level.

Directors praise Sartor proposal

By RICK SANTOS
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — Republican and Democratic leaders of the town's Board of Directors Tuesday praised General Manager Richard J. Sartor for asking them to review their longstanding policy of annually rejecting a federal grant now that the town has entered tough financial times.

For several years, the directors have voted against applying for the Community Development Block Grant, to appease voters, who have told the town not to apply for the grants at three referendums since 1979.

The opposition to the federal grants, said Deputy Mayor Ronald Oella, is based on a misconception that the town would be forced by the government to establish low-income and affordable housing.

"I have went through these regulations with a fine-toothed comb to destroy the myth that there are no strings attached from HUD,"

Oella's plan is to use the materials generated from construction projects, including the Main Street reconstruction, to fill the area. "I've got... contractors calling me saying why do I have to pay to dump good fill material," he told fellow members of the Board of Directors at their meeting Tuesday night.

The town landfill charges contractors fees for dumping such materials.

Oella faced opposition from Democratic Director Stephen T. Cassano, who said the site, which is north of Lewis Street, has been reviewed and rejected many times and is not worth exploring now, especially because General Manager Richard J. Sartor is in the middle of drafting a proposed budget.

"With all he's got to do, the last thing he's got to worry about is filling a hole on Lewis Street," said Cassano, who is the minority leader on the board.

In a memorandum Oella suggested the fire station could replace the School Street station and the central headquarters on Center Street. He said the central firehouse could be used as temporary space for town hall instead of purchasing the building soon to be vacated by the U.S. Postal Service which is being considered.

'Job shadowing' program expands

By SCOTT B. BREDE
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — In order to give Manchester High School students an extra edge when they enter the work force, the school's Career Services Department has stepped up its job shadowing and internship programs.

Since mid-October, 73 students have visited work sites for a day to observe the ins and outs of the jobs they have selected. The department may schedule as many as 150 more job shadowing before the end of the school year, said Richard Gagliardi, the director of Career and Vocational Education for Manchester.

Students have shadowed positions from veterinarians and attorneys to restaurant owners, Gagliardi said. Local businesses have been very receptive of the program, he added.

The department also has placed students in internship positions. This semester two seniors are involved in internships in Manchester: one with a teacher for a third-grade class at Nathan Hale Elementary School, the other at the Manchester Herald.

Amy M. Smith's internship came after she shadowed a reporter at the Herald last semester. And, despite being kicked out of a bank only a few hours into the shadowing, Smith opted to stay on at the newspaper for her internship.

It was the Monday after Confed Savings Bank was seized by federal regulators, recalls Smith of the frustrating morning she went out with a reporter to get the reactions of local investors.

She, along with the reporter, walked into the third's Main Street branch and soon were asked to leave by bank officials who would not comment on the bank's plight. So, they had to stand out on the sidewalks and wait for investors to exit the bank to get their comments.

After about a half hour they gathered enough comments to write a story.

Since, becoming an intern, Smith is regularly given story assignments by editors at the paper. She then reports and writes the story on her own. Smith works at the Herald about three days a week after school, compiling a total of 60 hours of experience over the semester.

Panel takes agenda action

By SCOTT B. BREDE
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — Instead of waiting for town officials to put Agenda For Tomorrow recommendations into action, members of the citizens' action group are taking matters into their own hands.

A committee formed to insure the group's plans for the future of Manchester became a reality met Tuesday night to discuss a strategy at putting the recommendations in the hands of local agencies.

M. Philip Susag, the chairman of the Agenda's original steering committee, said most of his efforts to get local officials to implement some of the changes he recommended so far have failed.

In a recent conversation with Republican Town Director Geoffrey Nab, Susag said that Nab told him: "you can't expect government to do everything you want it to do."

But Tuesday night Susag said that he does not think the sole responsibility of implementing the recommendations should fall on the back of local government. Rather, a partnership between town officials, local business and agencies, and members of the follow-up committee should be formed to reach these goals for Manchester, he said.

Susag said that, even though budgets are tight and many of these recommendations call for increased spending, they still should remain on people's minds.

"Just because government doesn't have the money, it doesn't mean they shouldn't be interested in the recommendations," he said. Charles Colpitts, the chairman of the follow-up committee, suggested that the group should ask candidates running for town or state legislative positions in November where they stand on different recommendations in the Agenda For Tomorrow report.

The group will gain some leverage by getting candidates' responses on record, Colpitts said. Colpitts added the door has shut on a plan to team up with the Charter Revision Commission to implement some of these changes because the commission "has pretty much finished their work already."

During Tuesday's meeting, committee members discussed whose list specific health care recommendations in the report should fall into, trading suggestions on what local agencies or officials are in positions to act on their behalf.

Committee member Gloria DeLaFera, who also sits on the Board of Education, said that many of the recommendations to add drug and AIDS awareness programs in public schools have already been mandated by the state.

The committee agreed that for many of the health care recommendations it should contact Manchester Memorial Hospital and Manchester Director of Health Ronald Krausz. As for a specific recommendation that health care programs be established in the work force, the committee decided it will contact the heads of local unions and businesses around town.

TNT blasts school plan

By BRIAN M. TROTTA
Manchester Herald

BOLTON — The chairman of a local taxpayer's group says a stripped-down version of the school building project remains unaffordable, and promises the proposal will meet the same fate as the last plan.

Charles Holland, chairman of The Neglected Taxpayers, said the two new plans, estimated to cost just under $7.5 million, are still beyond the means of many residents.

"We know something has to be done," Holland said. "But we know it can be done cheaper."

Holland said the school board probably will try to force its latest plan through, claiming the plan must be accepted now or the town risks losing a 60 percent reimbursement for the project that the state has promised.

The state has given the town a June 30 deadline to get the project approved or risk having the reimbursement rate lowered. But Holland claims there are several precedents where the state has guaranteed a level of reimbursement beyond the deadline.

Meanwhile, Holland is pushing a plan that has been previously rejected by the Board of Education as impossible. The plan includes moving grades 7 and 8 to the high school and renovating Center School.

Holland said the entire project can be done for under $5 million.

"There are other schools that do this quite successfully," Holland said. "But the Board of Education just won't take a good hard look at this alternative."

However, Barry Stearns, a member of the Board of Education's buildings and grounds committee, said Holland's idea was considered and rejected because it would cost far more than any other plan.

Stearns said the extra costs would come about because the younger students have to be segregated from the high school students, and that would have required extensive renovations to the building.

In addition, Stearns said, there wasn't any support in the community for moving the two groups of students in one building.

But Holland wants the Board of Education to give voters a choice between his plan and the Board of Education's plan.

"If the voters went with the board's plan, then the people have spoken, and we'd have to live with it," he said. "But we believe we represent the majority of voters in town, and until we are proven otherwise, we will continue to believe it."

Circus fire case reopened

HARTFORD (AP) — The mystery of why no one claimed a little girl who lost her life in the nation's worst circus fire has been solved, but whether the fire was deliberately set almost 50 years ago remains a question mark. Connecticut authorities on Tuesday reserved judgment on new evidence about the fire's cause, promising only to look into a nine-year investigation by Hartford Fire Lt. Rick Davey. The original investigation concluded the fire was ignited by a carelessly discarded cigarette, but Davey found that it was arson. The fire broke out in the big top of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey circus on July 6, 1944, killing 168 people and injuring 300. Among those killed was "Little Miss 1565," a child known only for the number given her at the morgue. Based on Davey's evidence, the state medical examiner's office on Friday issued an amended death certificate to include her name, Eleanor Cook, the 8-year-old daughter of Mildred Cook, a former insurance adjuster who also lost a 6-year-old son, Edward, in the fire. Davey spent nine years researching the fire, haunted by a morgue photograph of the anonymous dead girl, who came to symbolize a tragedy known in circus lore as "The Day the Clowns Cried."

Agency to release records

The Associated Press
HARTFORD — The state Department of Administrative Services began making available to the public a wide range of computer records, including such things as employee time and attendance records. The information is being made available, when possible, in the computer medium requested, such as a diskette or tape, at the cost to the agency to produce it. It is information already available under state freedom of information laws; the new twist is that it is available in computer software. "We are going to be guided by what is available under the freedom of information act and treat it as we would any other piece of government information," said DAS spokesman William K. Seymour during a meeting Tuesday of a committee created to develop a computer access policy for state government.

Potential AIDS victims don't seek treatment

HARTFORD (AP) — Many Connecticut residents thought to be infected with the AIDS virus are not taking advantage of free medical treatment that may delay the onset of the deadly disease and prolong their lives, experts say. A check of community health centers and hospital records in the state suggests that the number of people being treated for illnesses related to the human immunodeficiency virus is far short of the federal estimate for the infection in Connecticut. "There are literally hundreds of people who would benefit, and we are missing them," said Dr. Harry Z. Katz-Pollak, an HIV specialist at Burlington health center. In 1989, the Hartford Health Department began driving a van around neighborhoods encouraging people who felt they were at risk of AIDS to step abroad for blood tests and counseling. Almost two years and 300 tests later, the outreach has resulted in detecting HIV infection in 28 percent of those tested, compared with 7 percent among those who turn up at the health department's office, said Mark Henrickson, the city's AIDS program director. Still, AIDS specialists say the government is doing little to encourage those infected with the virus to seek treatment. "It was 1989 when we first learned that (the antiviral drug) AZT prevented AIDS in those infected with HIV," said Sher Horvack, coordinator of the mayor's task force on AIDS in New Haven. "Yet, even with that awareness, we haven't seen any state, federal or local dollars to convey the urgency to the HIV-infected."

Suit targets retarded care

HARTFORD (AP) — Three Connecticut families with mentally retarded children have filed a lawsuit in U.S. District Court to force the state Department of Education to mainstream children with disabilities. The suit, filed on behalf of 10-year-old "P.J." of West Hartford, 39-year-old "M.L." of Windham, and 6-year-old "M.L." of Windham, names as defendants the State Board of Education, Department of Education, Commissioner Gerald N. Truzzi, and the boards of education in the towns where the plaintiffs live. The families want their children to be taught alongside normal children in public classrooms. The families charge that the Education Department has ignored federal law requiring the integration of disabled children with those who are not disabled. "To the maximum extent appropriate," the suit asks that the court force the Education Department to develop procedures that will end the "arbitrary and illegal segregation of severely handicapped children in most of Connecticut's public schools."

Thoughts

It does not require one to be an economist in order to see we are living in some difficult financial times. Nor does one need to be a pastor to realize these are difficult times as well. There continues to be the pressure to conform and comprise God's standards in our schools, workplaces and personal lives. How are we to conduct ourselves in these pressing situations? Can we maintain spiritual integrity in a disintegrating world?
In Daniel, chapter three, we read that King Nebuchadnezzar built an image of gold ninety feet high and nine feet wide. He commanded that at the announced time all his officials and subjects of every language were to bow down and worship this image he had made. When the horn sounded, three specific men refused to bow down. There were servants of the Most High God and refused to worship anyone but the one true God.
When word of this reached the king, he was furious and rounded the men up and threw them into a blazing furnace. The kings of Babylon were noted for roasting people alive who disobeyed their commands.
God used this opportunity to miraculously have Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego come out from the fiery furnace unharmed and in perfect condition. God honored their spiritual integrity and desire to uphold the truth of his word no matter what pressure evil men would apply.
Like Daniel's friends, we, too, need to strive to maintain our spiritual integrity in a disintegrating world. The pressure to comprise and bow will continue to be. But the Lord is my helper; I will not be afraid. What can man do to me?

Thoughts

It does not require one to be an economist in order to see we are living in some difficult financial times. Nor does one need to be a pastor to realize these are difficult times as well. There continues to be the pressure to conform and comprise God's standards in our schools, workplaces and personal lives. How are we to conduct ourselves in these pressing situations? Can we maintain spiritual integrity in a disintegrating world?
In Daniel, chapter three, we read that King Nebuchadnezzar built an image of gold ninety feet high and nine feet wide. He commanded that at the announced time all his officials and subjects of every language were to bow down and worship this image he had made. When the horn sounded, three specific men refused to bow down. There were servants of the Most High God and refused to worship anyone but the one true God.
When word of this reached the king, he was furious and rounded the men up and threw them into a blazing furnace. The kings of Babylon were noted for roasting people alive who disobeyed their commands.
God used this opportunity to miraculously have Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego come out from the fiery furnace unharmed and in perfect condition. God honored their spiritual integrity and desire to uphold the truth of his word no matter what pressure evil men would apply.
Like Daniel's friends, we, too, need to strive to maintain our spiritual integrity in a disintegrating world. The pressure to comprise and bow will continue to be. But the Lord is my helper; I will not be afraid. What can man do to me?

FOOD

Even if you've never set foot on the Emerald Isle nor kissed the Blarney stone, you'll probably feel a bit Irish on St. Patrick's Day. Who can resist "wearing the green" and taking part in the sheer joy of life that is so typically Irish?

It's so hard to bring to mind images of lush green, rolling hills, craggy seashores and a culture rich with poetry, legends, folklore and song. In colorful cities with names like County Kerry, Kilkenny and Donegal, you can envision cheerful Irish villagers mingling in local pubs, toasting the good fortune of friends and neighbors. Even if you've never visited Ireland, you can imagine whitewashed cottages where mothers with names like Mächree and O'Rourke pull loaves of hot bread from the oven and offer thick slices to enjoy with a cup of tea or a glass of stout.

Re-create these cozy images of Ireland in your own home this St. Patrick's Day. Invite family and friends to be Irish with you. To set the mood, serve these delicious, Irish-style breads made with convenient hot roll mix and quick bread mix.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Speak up for others

DEAR ABBY: The Nazis killed my aunt not long before I was inducted into the service in 1945. My father's last days at age 94 (some 45 years later) were consumed by that terrible occurrence.

Just today I watched a television talk show where a vocal minority made some very convincing comments against our involvement in the war against Iraq. Although I would not wish to silence that group's warnings, because I too, felt uneasy about entering yet another war, I'm enclosing a gem of a piece that appeared in your column. Please print it again, it is timeless.

ERIC SCHOENHAAR, GREENLEY, COLO.

DEAR ABBY: That "gem of a piece" has appeared in my column several times, and I agree, it is indeed timeless. And it's also timely.

It was written by the Rev. Martin Niemöller, a German Lutheran pastor who was arrested by the Gestapo in 1938. He was sent to Dachau concentration camp where he remained until he was freed by the Allied forces in 1945. It was titled "I Didn't Speak Up"—and here it is:

"In Germany, the Nazis first came for the communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time there was no one left to speak for me."

DEAR ABBY: About five or six years ago, the U.S. Postal Service developed a system to expedite mail delivery.

Unfortunately, most businesses chose to ignore the suggestions. I hereby state the suggestions that were submitted:

- (1) Use no comma after the name of the city.
- (2) The abbreviation for the state of Illinois should be two letters—"IL"—not "ILL."
- (3) The ZIP code should be written on the same line following the name of the state.

Abby, perhaps if you print this in your column, the public will pay some attention to it. The post office got exactly nowhere with its suggestions.

WORKING FOR THE POST OFFICE

DEAR WORKING: I'll publish your letter. That's the least I can do for the U.S. Postal Service after all it has done for me.

Q: My husband and I have this argument about George Jones, the country singer. He says George lived in Aberdeen, Miss., as a teen-ager and also was born there. I don't think so. Who's right?—D.H., Hot Springs, Ark.

Q: Could you please tell me if Tom Wopat is from Michigan and where? He was recruited at a summer playhouse nearby and we all enjoyed him so much.—R.M., Vicksburg, Mich.

A: No. Tom Wopat was born and grew up in Lodi, Wis., which is close to Michigan, but no cigar.

Q: Was Robert Shaw in the 1958 movie "Antonie" named?—S.H., Kalamazoo, Mich.

A: No.

Q: While stationed in Great Britain in 1982 or 1983, we watched a movie about the effects following a nuclear war. It was set entirely in England and was very graphic and more realistic than most. I'm sure the title was "Threads." Is it on cassette?—B.E., Parsons, W.V.

A: Yes, "Threads," which told of the effect of a nuclear war on the city of Sheffield, is on cassette.

The movie, which begins filming next month, will star Kevin Costner as former New Orleans prosecutor James Garrison, whose investigation maintained Kennedy was the victim of a CIA and FBI conspiracy and gunman Lee Harvey Oswald was the fall guy.

Former University of Texas football coach Darrell Royal bought and Willie Nelson's Austin, Texas, golf course and country club intending to sell it back to him someday.

BEST RAP ALBUM — Rap singer M.C. Hammer displays one of three trophies he received at the 1991 Soul Train Awards show held Tuesday night in Los Angeles. Hammer also won awards for best contemporary song of the year and the Sammy Davis Jr. Award.

The 72-year-old "60 Minutes" correspondent was listed in good condition at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital, where he was to undergo tests today.

The diagnosis can be made with a Holter monitor, a continuous 24-hour electrocardiogram, which will automatically record the palpitations for later analysis. Then, using this information, the doctor can determine the type of heart rhythm causing symptoms. Such symptoms include weakness, fainting, shortness of breath (dyspnea), apprehension and chest discomfort.

Judging from your age and your description of the palpitations (up to 180 beats per minute), I suspect you are experiencing extended attacks of paroxysmal atrial tachycardia. Since these attacks are not hazardous to your health, you needn't worry about them. Nonetheless, they should be diagnosed and — if they occur frequently — treated.

I suggest you make an appointment with a cardiologist. This specialist will examine your heart and obtain the necessary tests to document the exact cause of your symptoms.

Dr. Gott

Peter Gott, M.D.

See MD about palpitations

DEAR DR. GOTT: When do heart palpitations become serious enough for an individual to visit the doctor? I'm 26 and have had them for eight years. My doctor feels they come from stress. My heart beats around 180 bpm in perfectly good shape," said CBS News anchor Peter Gott.

DEAR READER: Palpitations, awareness of rapid or irregular pulse, are a common complaint affecting both healthy people and those with heart disorders.

In its simplest form, palpitations consist of one or two extra beats or a brief episode of irregular pulse. This is harmless. It commonly occurs during periods of stress or fatigue and is often related to smoking or consuming caffeine. Many people experience this phenomenon on occasion. It does not indicate heart disease.

On the other hand, palpitations may reflect an extended attack of rapid heart rate, including ventricular tachycardia, a potentially fatal "runaway" rhythm associated with cardiac disease.

Midway between these extremes are moderately severe forms of palpitations, including paroxysmal atrial flutter and fibrillation bursts of rapid heartbeats that should be treated, even though they may not indicate heart disease. For example, mitral valve prolapse, a weakness of one of the heart's valves, frequently causes harmless but distressing periods of rapid pulse; paroxysmal atrial tachycardia. The condition, which is more common in women than in men, can be successfully treated with beta-blockers to regulate the heart rate.

Therefore, before assuming that palpitations are harmless (or harmful), a doctor needs to know what form is present. The diagnosis can be made with a Holter monitor, a continuous 24-hour electrocardiogram, which will automatically record the palpitations for later analysis. Then, using this information, the doctor can determine the type of heart rhythm causing symptoms. Such symptoms include weakness, fainting, shortness of breath (dyspnea), apprehension and chest discomfort.

Judging from your age and your description of the palpitations (up to 180 beats per minute), I suspect you are experiencing extended attacks of paroxysmal atrial tachycardia. Since these attacks are not hazardous to your health, you needn't worry about them. Nonetheless, they should be diagnosed and — if they occur frequently — treated.

I suggest you make an appointment with a cardiologist. This specialist will examine your heart and obtain the necessary tests to document the exact cause of your symptoms.

Unions offer cuts to save newspaper

By PETER ALAN HAPPER, The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Leaders of the Daily News' nine striking unions gave British publisher Robert Maxwell a tremendous victory for the American labor movement, striking columnist Juan Gonzalez said.

The strike was seen as a major showdown for the future of unions around the country, mostly because the paper quickly hired replacement workers to join management and picket-line crossers producing the paper every day.

On the picket line outside the News building, strikers chanted "Union! Union!" and toasted each other with champagne in paper cups as they learned the paper would probably be rescued.

"We're not Eastern, we're not Greyhound, we're not the union," said Jerry Capaci, the News' organized-crime reporter. Eastern Airlines and Greyhound hired replacements during recent strikes.

Inside the newspaper, replacement workers received word that their jobs were coming to an end.

"The way I look at it, I helped keep this paper alive for a while," said Michael Connerford, 31, who came to the News from Chicago. "I didn't take anybody's job because they're coming back in the future."

McDonald's: lean cuisine?

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — McDonald's will soon introduce nationally a low-fat hamburger called the McLean Deluxe, according to published reports.

Analysts said it could start a trend, and at least one health activist hailed the menu addition.

The McLean Deluxe, which underwent test-marketing beginning in November in Harrisburg, Pa., and eventually four other cities, will be available nationally April 26. The New York Times said today. It cited unidentified McDonald's franchisees.

McDonald's Corp. refused to comment on the reports but scheduled a news conference today at its test kitchens in this Chicago suburb to announce the national introduction of what it described as "a major new product."

Low-fat burgers have been offered before, but they relied on soy substitute for meat.

Meat in the McLean is made from a new process using carageenan, a common food additive made from seaweed. The Wall Street Journal reported today. The process devised at Auburn University in Alabama uses carageenan to bind the beef, allowing water to replace fat.

BNE blamed for builder's bankruptcy

BOSTON (AP) — One of Boston's biggest real estate owners, who owes lenders close to $650 million, is blaming the failed Bank of New England for forcing him to file for federal bankruptcy protection.

"One of the basics of the restructuring is that all lenders play on the same field and by the same rules," said real estate magnate Harold Brown. "Unfortunately, the Bank of New England was not one of those."

Brown, who owns 1,500 residential units and 4 million square feet of commercial space in Boston, said a 10.2 million square feet of commercial space in New England, filed for bankruptcy late Tuesday, hours after an appeals court ruling allowed the New Bank of New England to start placing $7 million worth of liens on property Brown owns in Boston and Brookline.

A spokesman for the bank called Brown's actions "unfortunate and unnecessary."

"We had hoped to reach an acceptable solution," said James R. Dorsey, the bank's head of corporate communications.

But Brown blamed bank officials for stubbornly refusing to negotiate a restructuring of his debt, unlike other banks he owes. The New Bank of New England is one of Brown's lesser creditors, owed $26 million out of the total $647 million.

He said he was forced to seek Chapter 11 protection because of the bank's "inexplicable, total and absolute impetuosity."

The New Bank of New England and two other lenders, Fleet-Norstar of Providence and Bank of Boston, sued Brown in December, claiming he defaulted on loan payments.

Brown's properties will operate as usual while the company restructures under the safety of the bankruptcy court, he said.

But the action may strike a bigger blow to the sagging Boston real estate market by aggravating the already sluggish market or dampening confidence in the New England real estate as a solid investment, industry experts said.

Kuwait makes news for rebuilding effort

WASHINGTON (AP) — You know the notion of rebuilding Kuwait has proper political standing in Washington when it causes the founding of a newsletter — for the express purpose of reporting on the reconstruction.

Anyone looking to cash in on the rebuilding can subscribe to Gulf Reconstruction Report, a newsletter that promises "quick-breaking information" about reconstruction needs, Kuwait's private sector and the hazards of business. It costs $396 a year.

David Gump, executive editor of the report, says he believes people will be willing to pay for a one-stop source on what's going on in Kuwait, where lucrative reconstruction contracts will be let. Gump said the twice-a-month newsletter, which will range from 8 to 16 pages, is likely to have a life span of three years to five years, the minimum time Commerce Department officials estimate it will take to rebuild Kuwait.

They expect it could take a decade and cost $100 billion to reconstruct the oil-rich emirate that was pillaged by Iraqi troops who set fire to oil wells, destroyed bridges, installed land mines and stripped the country down to its street lights.
