Police Roundup

Man arrested in church

MANCHESTER — Police have arrested a Vernon man after he was found sleeping in the basement of St. James Church.

Police arrested Brian D. Payette, 31, of 169 Vernon Ave., Vernon early Thursday morning after one of the priests at the church went into the rectory to open the curtains and found him on the couch.

Police said that about 1 a.m. Fr. Francis Krakowski heard a crash that sounded like glass breaking, but found nothing when he checked the rectory.

Police allege that Payette had pried a screen off a window and then broke the window. Payette allegedly entered the rectory office through the window and ransacked it, taking money from several envelopes and prying open a drawer.

Police said Payette had $86 on him when he was arrested. The money was seized and tagged as evidence.

Payette is being charged with second degree burglary, second degree criminal mischief and sixth degree larceny. He is being held on a $5,000 surety bond pending arraignment in Manchester Superior Court, May 15.

Tension, surprise pervade on Bolton election night

By DAVID LAMMEY
Manchester Herald

The following story describes the scene at Monday's election in Community Hall. Voting results in the story are unofficial. A recount began this morning at the town clerk's office and is expected to be finished later today.

BOLTON — "Quiet please," the woman said. "Quiet." And the crowd of citizens in the back of the hall, herded together behind a line of desks, readied their pens and pencils, and listened.

The woman walked up to the first of the metallic behemoths standing in the middle of the floor, and peered into its guts. Two women stood behind her, as if ready to catch her should she fall.

The woman called out the machine's serial number in a clear voice. Then she said, "Public counter reads, 4-0-8."

And so it started. The woman proceeded to read off all of the votes recorded in the four large voting machines, line by line, slot by slot.

Her voice propelled the scores of pens and pencils in the meeting room, laid in the hands of straight-faced citizens and candidates, many of whom had been there since 6:00 that morning. It was now 8:30 p.m.

Several sat behind the line of desks separating the crowd from the Stonehenge-like voting machines in the center of the room. They dutifully recorded each result announced.

Some sat buried in the crowd, bent over a pad of paper. Others peered over their shoulder as they counted whether they wanted to look or not, there was nowhere else to look.

About a half hour passed. And then the woman, Cicely Richards, moderator for the election, had finished. "You're free to go now," she said. But no one left. They had to count.

Conversation gradually rose from the silence, but there were no shouts, no slapping of backs. Some people spoke together quietly. It was hard to determine who had won without a scoreboard.

Robert Morra's daughters suddenly hugged him. He was smiling. Apparently, Mr. Morra had regained his first selectman seat.

Selectman Doug Cheney, a familiar face for those who know town hall, had left his seat and was walking across the room.

"Well, it looks like Grant Davis has beaten me," he said matter-of-factly, in response to a question. "That's the way it looks now."

Now a few gasps were heard. The crowd began to disperse, walking around the hall, around the voting machines.

After a few moments it became apparent that the Common Sense Coalition had scored a major upset. Except for first selectman, it seemed they had won it all. They had taken three selectman positions, two school board positions, and all three open finance board positions.

Coalition candidates and supporters were as amazed as anyone. They spoke excitedly in groups. Everyone seemed to be recounting.

One man stood in the middle of the floor and watched the scene. He seemed to understand what was going on. He said he had helped count absentee ballots.

"Only ones who voted a line was the Common Sense supporters," he said. "Democrats and Republicans, they were voting all over. At least, that's the way it was on the absentee ballots. No one else voted the line."

That would make a difference, wouldn't it? "Oh yes. The others tended to jump all over. The coalition supporters stuck together." "The man introduced himself. He was Richard Morra, father of Robert, and a former first selectman himself — from 1961-75. The same Richard Morra whose name was the catchphrase used by coalition candidates when they talked about the way government should be run.

"We want to get back to the days of Richie Morra," they would say.

So, was Mr. Morra happy for his son? "To tell the truth, I told him not to run, because it is too much trouble. He works awfully hard at it. But he wanted to, and he did a good job."

What did he think about the future of Bolton government? What would happen now? Will they be able to get back to the days of Richard Morra? "I hope so. I hope they get together and straighten things out, because the town is split apart," he said.

Soon, the hall was empty. Election day was over. But the election may have been just the start of political turbulence in Bolton. Tonight, a "Save Our Schools" rally is being held at town hall.

A group of sixth-grade girls from the Vernon Center Middle School surrounds Air Force Staff Sgt. Thomas W. Finnegan at the home of Finnegan's mother on Briarwood Dr., Manchester. The purpose of the party was to thank school children for the gifts and letters they sent the airman.

Local soldier gives thanks

By RICK SANTOS
Manchester Herald

MANCHESTER — While serving in the Persian Gulf last September, Air Force Staff Sgt. Thomas W. Finnegan, a Manchester native, was surprised when a batch of letters arrived from group of school children. But by the end of March, when Finnegan left the Gulf, his stack of mail was bursting with the walls of his tent in the Saudi Desert.

"I had so much mail that I had to send it home by ship," Finnegan said Thursday. "They only let us take two bags on the plane."

The students, sixth-graders from the Vernon Center Middle School, just kept sending and sending and sending. It was cookies in September, more cookies decorated with Halloween masks in October, a video tape the students made and lots more.

As thanks for the youths' support, Finnegan and his mother, Sandy, held a party and barbecue for the children at her home on Briarwood Drive.

"I visited the school, but that wasn't enough," said Finnegan, while sipping a break from a game of tag during the party Thursday.

The airman struggled to describe how important the letters and gifts were to him.

"It was a bright light for me over there," he said. "It was one of the few things that made me happy. Being there and away from home and missing my son's birth..." and his voice trailed off. Finnegan's first child, Tyler, was born on Christmas.

At the party Thursday, the students followed Finnegan around the yard like a puppy would follow a little boy, or a child would follow a favorite uncle.

That he was chosen from the hundreds of thousands of U.S. troops in the Persian Gulf area was no accident. The students' teacher, Lawrence Colvin, is the father-in-law of Finnegan's brother.

"I just made me feel good that I was doing something for somebody," said Colvin, who purposely suggested the mail, so the flow would remain steady.

Finnegan had planned to respond to every letter, but with the continual correspondence from 24 students, he couldn't keep up.

"The mail kept coming," he said, child, Tyler, was born on Christmas. "My tent was covered with stuffed animals and banners."

Iraqis leave Dohuk; skirmish possibility reduced

ZAKHO, Iraq (AP) — Iraq has withdrawn some soldiers from Dohuk, the U.S. Army said today, reducing the likelihood of a confrontation with allied soldiers poised to occupy the northern city for the Kurdish relief effort.

A U.N. envoy, meanwhile, said today that Iraq rejects a U.N. police presence in the north because it considers Kurdish security an internal matter and expects talks with local rebels in Baghdad to be successful. Iraq's move could jeopardize President Bush's plan to swiftly force the withdrawal of about 10,000 U.S. soldiers assisting Kurdish refugees in northern Iraq.

Iraq also promised not to shoot at allied planes patrolling allied-occupied northern Iraq, and took a step toward working with the Kurds by agreeing to try to form a joint police force in the secure zone.

The allies are endeavoring to pave the way home for Kurdish refugees who fled to the mountains after Iraqi forces crushed the rebellion in Iraq that can be fatal if left untreated.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said Thursday upon ending a tour of the gulf that he had won "a broad agreement" from area governments on steps to strengthen their defenses and to expand a U.S. military presence in the region.

Dohuk, a provincial capital of 380,000 about 25 miles from the Turkish border, is home to many of the Kurdish refugees remaining in the border camps and thus is a key to ending the saga of their flight.

Allied intelligence officers had said that Iraq was toughening its position around Dohuk, placing more than 1,000 soldiers on the surrounding hills and bringing units from southern Iraq to highways leading into the city.

However, Army Lt. Col. Lee Ryals, a spokesman at Incirlik Air Base in Turkey, said today that Iraqi troop withdrawals from the vicinity of Dohuk were "being consistently reported by intelligence people."

He said by today only about 100 soldiers remained in the city and immediate vicinity, and their number remained steady. He said the withdrawals began about a week ago.

Tighter pesticides controls sought

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Eight-year-old Jared Armitage, his voice wavering as he was called to speak to a crowded hearing room, got straight to the point: "I am interested in lawn care chemicals because I got sick from them."

Jared said he must have tators at home because he can't go to school, and he complained that he often can't even go outside and play on nice days.

"I get nasty when I am around lawn care pesticides," the cocky boy said, fidgeting next to his mother as he read his testimony Thursday to the Senate Environment subcommittee on toxic substances.

"I can't think I get depressed. A lot of other stuff happens to me like I don't listen, I salivate more, my nose runs, I get swollen glands and my ears hurt. When I am around pesticides, I do not eat and I get diarrhea."

Jared, who is from Baltimore, was one of four witnesses at the hearing who described the misery that lawn chemicals have brought to their lives.

The panel also heard from a woman who had to give up her career as a concert pianist after being sprayed with pesticides; a college student who sometimes lives in her car to avoid pesticide spraying near her home; and a man whose health was ruined by the intersection of a lawn care chemical with the prescription drug he was taking.

The subcommittee chairman, Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., said he hoped the Environmental Protection Agency would work harder to assess the health risks of lawn chemicals and tighten restrictions.

"Too many of us fail to recognize that the DRENCHED — Champion ice skater Christina Locek testifies before a Senate subcommittee on toxic substances, saying her life was ruined by chemicals sprayed on a neighbor's yard.

"While we have made major progress, much remains to be done to end this scourge," said Mickey Sadoff, national president of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, or MADD.

MADD and Advocates for Highway and Auto Safety, a group backed by the insurance industry, based their comments on a survey of the 30 states co-sponsored by the two groups.

John Carson, a consultant for the annual survey, DeLoitte & Touche, said in a summary of the survey.

Perhaps the most surprising finding was the economists' near-unanimous prediction that the General Assembly will eventually approve a state income tax. Gov. Lowell P. Weicker Jr. proposed an income tax in February, but he has met stiff opposition in the General Assembly.

Fully 93 percent of the economists responding — 50 out of 54 — said the state will have some form of an income tax, probably this year, but certainly by 1992.

Some 48 percent expect an income tax to be approved before the Legislature adjourns in June; another 37 percent said the Legislature to pass an income tax during a special session this year; and 74 percent expect an income tax in 1992.

An overwhelming majority, 96 percent, said they expect economic growth and job creation in Connecticut to be slower than the national economy over the next two years.

"It looks like at least another five months or so of decline in the Na-meg State," Hartford accountant

Producers and Distributors Association, urged the lawmakers to consider the "significant human health benefits" of lawn care chemicals.

"Herbicides control ragweed, thus reducing suffering from hay fever," Stickle said. "Other herbicides control dandelions and clover, and discourage bees from recreational and home and lawn areas, thus reducing bee stings. Approximately 45 to 50 people each year die of bee stings."

Stickle said the Senate bill's notification system was so extensive it would be "unworkable, un-economical and ineffective, and would be extremely burdensome" to businesses and local governments.

"For example, if the city of New York desired to spray the elm trees surrounding Central Park, it would have to provide written notification to somewhere between 100,000 and 250,000 people who live and work within 1,000 feet," he said.

Ann McClure, executive vice president of the Professional Lawn Care Association of America, said her group would support a more limited notification requirement. It would cover people who live adjacent to a customer's property and who submit a doctor's certificate showing they are sensitive to lawn care chemicals.

McClure said the association also backs a requirement to post markers on lawns when the products are applied.

"We also believe, however, that Congress should consider the requirement to non-commercial applicators — the do-it-yourselfers," she said. "The latest statistics show that 64 million people perform their own lawn care, while only 8 million engage lawn care services companies."

Pianist dies

GUILFORD, Vt. (AP) — Pianist Rudolf Serkin, hailed as both a brilliant performer and a teacher who could inspire young performers to new heights, has died at age 88.

The pianist died Wednesday night of cancer, his publicist, Mary Lynn Frixler, said Thursday.

Serkin was born in what now is Czechoslovakia and was sent to Vienna to study piano as a child.

He made his concert debut in 1915 at age 12. He gave his last major concert performance 73 years later, with Sir Georg Solti and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

"All of my orchestra felt, as I did, the undiminished genius of this outstanding musician," Solti said afterward.

Serkin founded the Marlboro Music School and Festival on the campus of Marlboro College in southern Vermont in 1950.

In celebration of beans

This is an appropriate time of the year to celebrate the bean, a popular vegetable that many home gardeners will be seeding this spring.

The bean presents to the gourmet gardener a pleasant array of choices. Originally tall, twining plants in their South American habitats, beans have been tamed in modern times into an alternate bush form.

The common bean (Phaseolus vulgaris) includes both snap beans, and shell and dry beans. Snap beans are grown for their young tender pods, while shell and dry beans are grown for the seeds within the pods.

The snap bean goes by several other names — French bean, green bean and string bean.

The term French bean refers to the enormous popularity of this vegetable in France, where special varieties of green bean (flet beans, or haricots verts) have been bred for slow seed development and fine flavor.

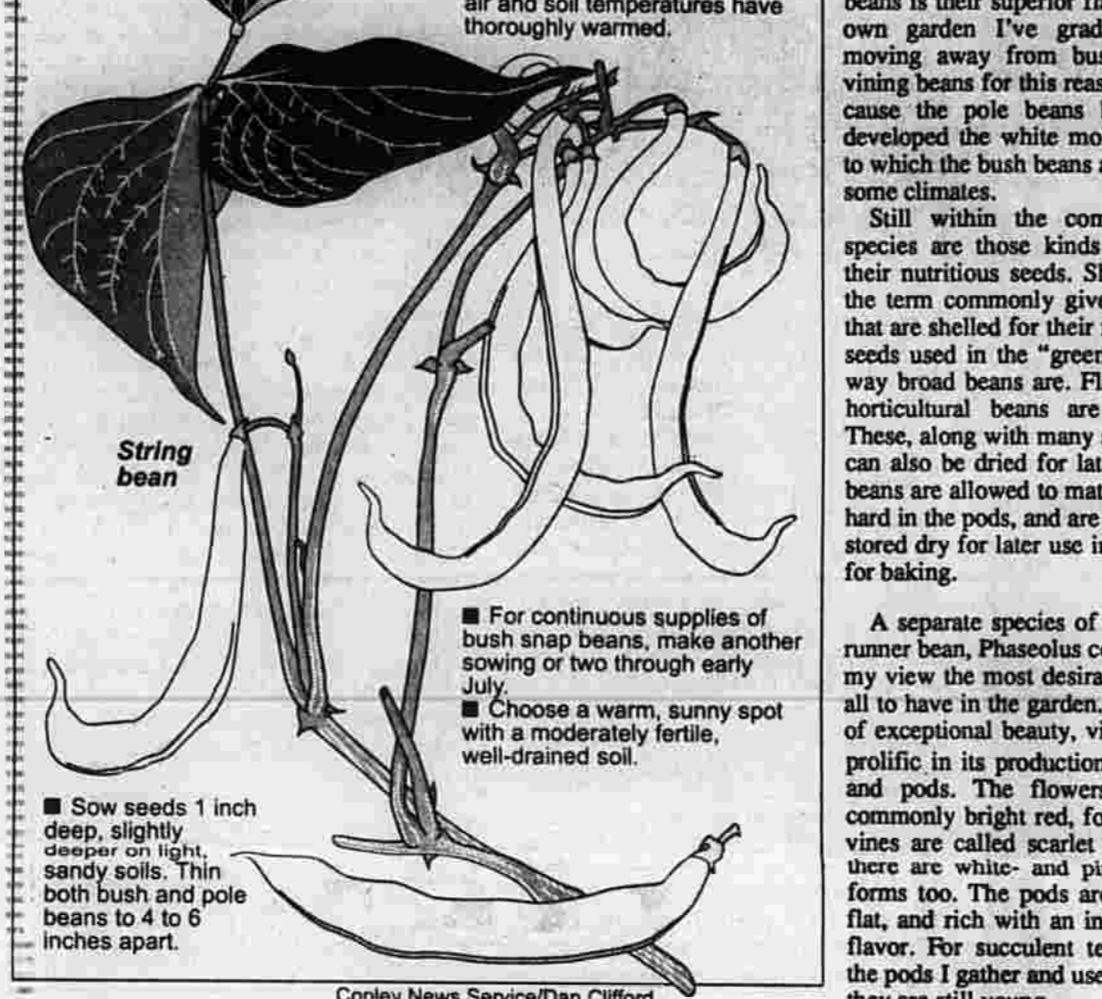

Johnny's Selected Seeds (P.O. Box Hill Road, Albion, ME 04910 — catalog free) lists three French flet bean varieties.

The name green bean fits the

GARDEN TIPS

Beans from seed

- Sow bean seeds when both air and soil temperatures have thoroughly warmed.
- For continuous supplies of bush snap beans, make another sowing or two through early July.
- Choose a warm, sunny spot with a moderately fertile, well-drained soil.
- Sow seeds 1 inch deep, slightly below the light, sandy soil. Thin both bush and pole beans to 4 to 6 inches apart.

Chauncey Knox: early hotelkeeper

By GLADYS S. ADAMS
Manchester Herald

Many streets in Manchester are named for the people who once lived at those locations in earlier days.

— Knox Street, on the north side of Center and west of Main Street, is named for the Knox family whose farm occupied that area many years ago.

— Samuel Knox (1780-1836) and his wife Lydia (Genton) Knox had a family that included three sons: Chauncey, Chester, and David, all born in Manchester.

— Chester Knox was a farmer and fur dealer. There was plenty of game in the area then, and trapping provided a steady income.

A cozy girl's bedroom

Q. Our daughter's bedroom is so large her furniture looks lost. She doesn't mind — there seem to be constant sleep-overs who bring their own sleeping bags to the large floor space is good. But the empty feeling bothers me. Maybe I should change the wallpaper, which is yellow and white stripes, to something busier? — L.J.

A. You don't have to change all the wallpaper. In fact, you don't have to change it at all; just add a bit of pattern and color right over the wall.

Interior designer Kat Dickelman worked decorative magic with a few yards of elegant fabric when she did over a young girl's bedroom for a designer show house in New Jersey.

She hung the fabric behind the brass bedstead, swinging it from silk flowers that picked up the color in the print... which, in turn, coordinated with the soft stripe in the wall covering. An overall ribbon-and-floral patterned rug carried forth teacher Kate Cocco.

"Some of the kids come out of here and say 'I never want to have kids in my life,'" Cocco said. But, most her students love working with the children, she said.

"This is by far the best class in the school," said Sean Keenan, as he helped Josh Philbrick, the four-year-old that he has been paired with this semester, build a catapult out of blocks.

Keenan, a senior, said he has observed Philbrick's progress over the last few months. Besides his intellectual improvement, Keenan said, he looks at how well Philbrick gets along with the other nursery school children.

The students give the children's parents regular evaluations of the progress, said Lirio. She added that she likes the program because it frees up two of her mornings each week.

Her daughter also seems happy being paired up with the students.

"When I come to pick them up, Christina will sometimes tell me to go away and come back later because she's not done playing yet," she said.

Cocco said the high school students receive six weeks of training at the beginning of the semester when they start taking care of the children.

For part of that training, Cocco said her classes visit the birthing unit at Manchester Memorial Hospital. She also has guest speakers talk to the class about topics such as child abuse and foster parenting.

This past year, the child development students got to observe Cocco as she went through the different stages of pregnancy. Cocco kept teaching the class until four days before she was scheduled to deliver.

"They saw that a pregnant woman doesn't have to stay at home," said Cocco, who is currently on a maternity leave until next semester. In the course helps students prepare for when they have their own children, she said.

It costs $15 per semester for parents to place their children into the nursery school, which runs from 8:30 to 10:55 a.m., on Mondays and Wednesdays. Currently, the school has a waiting list of about 45 children, Cocco said.

The major program, Pell Grants, will serve 3.4 million students with $5.3 billion in federal spending in 1991. While the funding accounted for about 41 percent of the cost of higher education a decade ago, the grants only meet about 29 percent of a student's total financial needs.

That means fewer students can depend on the federal government to pay for their education. Many students depend on the federal government to pay for their education. Many students depend on the federal government to pay for their education.

Thursday with King Fahd of Saudi Arabia. The Saudis are the main U.S. ally in the gulf.

Cheney repeatedly refused to say that he had achieved hard and fast agreements with any of the six countries he visited, nor would he reveal any details of his talks.

But he strongly suggested that most or all of the nations had accepted in principle the proposals he brought from President Bush.

"There is a much significantly enhanced willingness on the part of many of the governments in the region to cooperate on security arrangements," he said.

These include U.S. training of gulf armed forces, joint U.S.-Arab exercises in the region and stockpiling U.S. military equipment and supplies in one or more of the gulf countries.

U.S. officials have said they would like to put enough tanks and other military hardware in Saudi Arabia to equip a U.S. Army division in the event that a crisis required the return of American combat forces.

Saudi Arabia has not publicly endorsed this stockpiling plan, and Cheney would not say whether Fahd had accepted it, or even whether it was discussed in their meeting at the king's al-Thamamah Palace outside of Riyadh, the Saudi capital.

Cheney said he was being deliberately vague in describing the outcome of his trip because "one of the lessons you learn in this part of the world is that discretion is very important."

But he left little room for doubt that at least some of the U.S. proposals were accepted by Fahd and the other leaders.

"We made progress in terms of getting agreement that those kinds of activities will be a part of our joint endeavors in the region and that we will work together on joint training, joint exercises, prepositioning of equipment," he said.

Insurance

are not indicative of the general health of the industry and the overwhelming majority of life insurance companies.

Sutton cited a slew of statistics to back his claim that the industry is healthy. Most life insurance companies as of Jan. 1, 1990 — are bonds and mortgages, he said, while real estate holdings comprise less than 5 percent of assets, and stocks no more than 7 percent.

More than 90 percent of mortgages, however, are in the commercial real estate sector, which is continuing to suffer a serious downturn in many parts of the country. Sutton noted the mortgages are diversified across regions and types of properties.

The most powerful testimony came from 77-year-old Don Sigerson of Los Angeles, Calif., president of the Executive Life Support Network, a group of Executive Life policyholders and beneficiaries.

Although Sigerson — spurred by a Los Angeles Times story on Executive's precarious financial condition — moved to cash in his policy before state regulators took the company over, he has not received a cent of the $370,000 he expected.

Thursday's vote was Weicker's first serious floor fight and he had all of his top aides working the Senate floor looking for votes.

Before the debate began, his co-declayed staff, Thomas J. D'Amore Jr., had asked that the vote be delayed a week. But Senate leaders, refused and, in the end, it wasn't necessary, at least from D'Amore's point of view.

The governor said afterward he was "very appreciative" of the Senate vote.

The 90-minute debate fell along the familiar lines that have emerged since Weicker asked for the bill: those who feel the administration was treating the Indians unfairly by trying to change the law after the Supreme Court fight, and those who worry about the infiltration of organized crime.

Some argued the original Las Vegas night statute never contemplated full casino gambling in Connecticut.

"Before we know it, Connecticut will be the Atlantic City of New England, and that's not a compliment in my opinion," said Sen. James T. Fleming, R-Simsbury, who said, as Weicker had, that organized crime, prostitution and other criminal activity had flourished after casinos were approved in Atlantic City, N.J.

"Ledyard, Connecticut, is not Atlantic City, New Jersey, and in my opinion the Ledyard, Connecticut, will not become Atlantic City, New Jersey," said Sen. Kenneth L. Prybyz, D-Monville. "We look at it as an economic development issue."

"Let the tribe have gambling," said Sen. Frank D. Barrows, D-Hartford, co-chairman of the Public Safety Committee, which has jurisdiction over gaming issues. "I think we gave them the shaft a long time ago."

"Why don't we take out all gambling in Connecticut if we want to be so pure and clean?" Barrows asked.

Sen. Steven C. Casey, D-Bristol, said lawmakers were being naive if they thought organized crime could be kept away from a gaming facility. "Not the government, not the legislature ... not all the police in the world can stop organized crime from infiltrating casino gambling," Casey said.

Sen. Steven Spellman, D-Stonington, whose district includes the reservation, said the Indians would be able to control the casino and said flatly that "organized crime will never get one inch of foothold in the Mashamuckett Pequot casino."

PENGUINS ZERO IN ON STANLEY CUP FINAL

BOSTON — The Pittsburgh Penguins have been known for their speedy skaters and sharpshooters. It takes more than that to win a Stanley Cup.

They crushed Boston 7-2 Thursday night for their third consecutive victory after two straight losses and can reach the championship round for the first time in their 24-year history by beating the Bruins in Saturday night's sixth game.

"When we get ahead, it's tough to come back," Pittsburgh forward Kevin Stevens said. "We played hard, and our defense is playing great."

They are as talented a team offensively as there is in this league," Boston coach Mike Milbury said. "Maybe we didn't give their defense enough credit, because they're very solid."

With two goals and three assists Thursday night, Stevens was involved in more goals than goalie Tom Barraso and his teammates allowed the Bruins in the last three games. After winning 6-3 and 5-4 at home, Boston lost two 4-1 games in Pittsburgh before the third straight blowout.

It was only the seventh time in their history (7-38-6) that the Penguins had won in Boston Garden.

"This was probably our worst game of the year," said Boston's Cam Neely, who has 15 playoff goals but has been held to no goals and one assist in the last three games.

If the Penguins win the best-of-7 Wales Conference finals, they will gain the first final berth in their 24-year history. Boston has made it two of the last three years, losing to Detroit and the Capitals in the first round in its history.

"It's great," Lemieux said. "Every time you're on a winning team, it's always a great thing."

The Penguins were second in the NHL with 342 regular-season goals. But only three teams gave up more goals than the 305 they allowed. It's been a different story in the playoffs.

In the seventh game of the opening round, Pittsburgh blanked New Jersey 4-0. In the second round, Washington managed just one goal in each of the last three games as the Penguins won the series four games to one after losing the opener.

Now they are poised for another four-game winning streak.

"We have to continue to do the same things we've been doing," Pittsburgh's Ron Francis said. "Coach (Bob) Johnson said from the beginning it's a 20-man effort. You can't rely on one guy."

"They're playing very good hockey," Boston defenseman Ray Bourque said. "We've got a lot of guys they throw at you and a lot of skilled players and a lot of speed."

That was apparent Thursday night as the Penguins barely flinched when Don Sweeney scored for Boston just 40 seconds into the game. Pittsburgh got seven of the next eight goals.

"Every time we get the lead it's tough for them to put the checking line on us," Lemieux said.

BOSOX COOK 'GOOSE' IN COMEBACK VICTORY

BOSTON (AP) — For years, as the ace of the New York Yankees' bullpen, Rich Gossage thrived on pitching against the Boston Red Sox.

The current edition of the Red Sox knows little of Gossage's past performance, though, and the 39-year-old Goose no longer is golden.

Gossage, who nailed down the Yankees' victory in Boston in the only divisional playoff in AL history in 1978, couldn't retire a batter as the Red Sox rallied for five runs in the seventh inning Tuesday night for an 8-4 victory over the Texas Rangers.

After starter Scott Chiamparino gave up a leadoff double to Luis Rivera and reliever Mike Jeffcoat walked Wade Boggs, the only batter he faced, Gossage, 3-0 in 11 previous relief appearances this season, got the call.

Body Reed spoiled Gossage's return to Fenway Park with a line single to center, scoring Rivera with the tying run. Then Gossage walked Ellis Burks on a 3-1 pitch, filling the bases, and walked Jack Clark, forcing home Boggs with the go-ahead run.

John Barfield became the fourth pitcher in the inning and surrendered a two-run double to Mike Greenwell and a sacrifice fly to Tom Brunansky.

John Barfield became the fourth pitcher in the inning and surrendered a two-run double to Mike Greenwell and a sacrifice fly to Tom Brunansky.

"A two-strike hit by Jody, a couple of walks, a two-strike hit by Greenwell, and it was all over," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said. "You're going to be good and you're going to have some off nights. Tonight we had a little of both."

"Reed was the key guy there," said Gossage, who escaped the loss charged to Jeffcoat, 1-1. "I have to get him, but I didn't. Then it kind of snowballed from there."

Greenwell, who also had a triple and a single and popped to short while trying for a home run and the cycle in the eighth, noted that the Red Sox' patience, rather than their usual aggressiveness, at the plate paid off.

"Everybody was real patient in that rally," Greenwell said. "No one tried to be a big hero. Everybody just wanted to get on base."

With their fifth victory in six games, eighth in 10 and 14th in 18, the Red Sox remained tops in the AL East, one-half game ahead of Detroit.

"This was an outstanding win for us," Greenwell said. "It shows that we're the kind of team that can fall behind by three, four or five runs and come back and win. And we haven't really started to hit the way we can. When some of our guys who have been struggling, like Reed, Burks and Clark, get going we're going to score a lot of runs."

With their one-half game lead over Detroit threatened by the Tigers' victory in Minnesota, the Red Sox bounced back after the Rangers took a 4-0 lead on Juan Gonzalez' three-run homer in the second and Julio Franco's solo shot in the third.

Celtics set quick pace to even up NBA series

By ED GOLDEN
The Associated Press

BOSTON — The Boston Celtics turned the clock back to a little speed to their offense.

After being lulled to sleep by the deliberate style of the Detroit Pistons in Game 1, the Celtics returned to the quicker pace of their first-round victory over the Indiana Pacers and ran off with a 109-103 Eastern Conference semifinal series at 1-1.

"After seeing what Michael Williams did to us, we adjusted and milked it" against the Pistons, said Celtics coach Chris Ford, remembering how his team struggled to contain the Pacers' guard before finally ousting Indiana.

Ford also was able to count on Larry Bird, who missed the series opener with spasms in his aching back. The Pistons were without Isaiah Thomas because of an injured right foot suffered in the fourth quarter of Tuesday's 86-75 Pistons victory.

"Trigging the quicker Boston attack was rookie Dee Brown, who scored 15 of his 22 points in the fourth quarter along with three of his game-high eight assists."

"We needed somebody to step up," Brown said. "I wanted to be the guy to just make things happen. Not necessarily hitting the shot or making the pass, but just make something happen."

Thomas' absence may have aided Brown's performance, although Bill

Laimbeer wouldn't use that as an excuse.

"It means nothing," Laimbeer said of Thomas' absence. "Whether he's with the team or not, we have players capable of winning in this building."

Thomas, who was in uniform Thursday, would only say he would wait and see about playing Saturday afternoon, when the series resumes at the Palace of Auburn Hills. But team physician Ben Pollock said that with additional therapy, "I think he'll play."

Thomas, who was in uniform Thursday, would only say he would wait and see about playing Saturday afternoon, when the series resumes at the Palace of Auburn Hills. But team physician Ben Pollock said that with additional therapy, "I think he'll play."

Brown drew two men his way with 10:01 to play, so he passed to Bird for a 3-point basket to make it 76-71 Boston.

A similar chance arose with just under five minutes to play and Bird sank a 20-foot jump shot to build a nine-point Celtics lead, 92-83.

"Brown was a matchup problem for them today with his quickness and his penetration," Ford said. "He was spotting up well when we were posting up Bird."

Ford also said he was happy with the early contributions of Shaw and Kevin Gamble, who both had turned in shabby performances during the playoffs.

Shaw scored six of his eight points in the opening minutes, and Gamble scored all six of his points to help Boston to a 16-13 lead with 4:29 to play in the first quarter that ended with the Celtics ahead 26-21.

"The Celtics were much more aggressive," said Detroit coach Chuck Daly, whose team was led by Joe Dumars' 29 points and 24 from Mark Aguirre. "In Game 3, we're going to have to play harder and better."

The Pistons will also be counting on the jinx they seem to hold on the Celtics at the Palace, where Boston is 0-8.

"It is a plus to get one here," said Gerald Henderson, who replaced Thomas in the Detroit starting lineup.

"We'll go back and get two in Detroit and we'll see you next week," he said, referring to Game 5 Wednesday at Boston Garden.
