Reduce spending

Last year Congress promised to cut spending and to use the revenues from the second highest tax increase on record to reduce the federal deficit. Did they keep their promise? No Way! They only decreased the "proposed" spending in their unrealistic projections, and pushed the FY 1991 deficit to a record $320 million. And this does not even include the Gulf War costs. It is now reported that the interest alone on the national debt equals all the of the Mississippi. Is our Connecticut legislature doing any better? Hard to say that they are, on either expenses or income. When will they have the courage to put a definite limit on spending, and then enact an income tax, based for simplicity on a percent of the federal tax? They are killing us by inches with a constant expansion of the sales tax. Taxes must ultimately be paid by those who have the income and resources to do so, not by the unemployed, those below poverty level, or the elderly on fixed low incomes. Will the legislature continue to repeat the errors of the past, driving business away and sending shoppers across the state lines or to the mail order catalogues, where they are free from this damnable sales tax? Or are they afraid some other state will take over our spot for having the highest in the nation?
