Give Grandma gloomy gossip

DEAR ABBY: My son got into serious trouble and is in jail right now. He is 19 and began getting into trouble with the law three years ago. He's close to his grandparents, who live out of state, and when he first got into trouble at age 16, I kept them in the dark about it as long as I could. They eventually found out, and I know they worried a lot.

My son stayed out of trouble for more than a year. He went to counseling for alcohol abuse and other problems. realized he still had problems. But three days ago, he and a friend of his broke into someone's garage to steal and were caught. My heart broke once again. My son is now in county jail. I visited him there and managed to hold back my tears in front of him, but I cried all the way

Here's my problem: Should I tell my parents, who ar 1,000 miles away, and cause them all this grief? My mother telephones every weekend to "check in." I didn't have the heart to tell her this Sunday. Do you think she has the right to know? She always asks about her grandsons and is especially close to this one. I just don't

- BROKENHEARTED MOTHER DEAR BROKENHEARTED: Since your mother always asks, and feels especially close to this grandchild, I think you should tell her the truth now. Eventually she will have to be told, unless you intend to deceive your parents about the boy's whereabouts until he's served his time. If so, your chances for pulling it off are slim.

DEAR ABBY: Please discuss fathers tickling their young children. They seem to get some sadistic pleasure out of expressing their love (?) by tickling the little girls and boys until they scream with laughter, then pain -This needs discussion, Abby. I think it's sadistic! D

- MRS. B. IN JOPLIN, MO DEAR MRS. B: Yes. Children who "end up in tears" are experiencing pain - not pleasure - and no father should be permitted to play such games. Excessive tickling is said to stimulate children inappropriately. To subject a child to this kind of "play" is child abuse. Antibiotics, vaginitis linked

DEAR DR. GOTT: For the past two years I have had ecurring yeast and bacterial infections. My gynecologist is as baffled as I am and has tried every treatment she can think of. I've been tested for diabetes, don't take baths, use mild soaps and do everything possible to avoid infec-

DEAR READER: Because you have been under the care of a gynecologist, I assume that you have suffered repeated vaginal infections. Your situation is complicated by the presence of both yeasts and bacteria, an unusual

These are iatrogenic (physician-induced) infections that require a delicate balance of treatment in order to re-establish the normal yeast/bacteria ratio.

On the other hand, some healthy women seem to have natural tendency to one or the other vaginal infection. The cause of this is not known but may be related to immune deficiencies, repeated exposure to an infected sexual partner, the use of intrauterine contraceptive devices (which provide a ready source of infection), allergic reactions to spermicidal jellies or condoms or contraceptive foam, poor personal hygiene, and chronic infections of the upper genital tract (uterus and Fallopian tubes). In such women, gynecologists must obtain detailed medical histories (including in-depth questioning about sexual and bowel habits) and perform meticulous examinations to discover the sources of infec-

Also, other diseases (such as diabetes or AIDS) may predispose women to vaginitis.

Your gynecologist probably investigated these pos-sibilities, yet you are still experiencing symptoms. Therefore, I suggest you request a referral to the gynecology clinic in a medical center. animal-rights activism in the world. So prevalent are the assaults by an underground movement known as the Animal Liberation Front, that New Scotland Yard has a unit devoted strictly to investigating animal-rights violence. Some authorities in the United States and Britain fear that American animal-rights groups may be tempted to take some cues from the ALF.

Officials with the New Scotland Yard Animal Rights National Index operate under such secrecy that the only public information they provide is limited to tips that will help potential targets of violence protect themselves from the ALF.
