

Courant October 31,1911

Imported Their Potatoes.

Finding that the farmers hereabouts were asking $1 a bushel for potatoes, a number of men employed in the silk mills decided to see if they could not cut down the high cost of living by doing a little outside buying. A pool was formed and a carload of potatoes bought in Maine. The cost of the potatoes to the consumers after paying freight here and the cost of delivery to their homes was 85 cents a bushel and the potatoes they received were better, in many ways, than the majority of the potatoes sold around here.

lar between.

Imported Their Potatoes.

Finding that the farmers hereabouts were asking $1 a bushel for potatoes, a number of men employed in the silk mills decided to see if they could not cut down the high cost of living by doing a little outside buying. A pool was formed and a carload of potatoes bought in Maine. The cost of the potatoes to the consumers after paying freight here and the cost of delivery to their homes was 85 cents a bushel and the potatoes they received were better, in many ways, than the majority of the potatoes sold around here.

Hansen-Lelster,

Lorens J. Hanson, well known in town of ...