WASHINGTON (AP) - "The adminsitration of price control is an extraordinarily difficult and complex business, and it can work only if the people generally give it their support." -So said President Harry S.

Truman as he regretfully canceled price controls Nov. 9, 1946. World War II was over, and the initials OPA-for Office of Price Administration-were dirty words to businessmen. Congress, under pressure from farm and industry groups, had weakened the law seriously.

"The plain fact is that, under this inadequate law, price control has lost the popular support needed to make it work."

So the nation's first great plunge into direct interference with the free market ended in confusion, controversy—and more inflation, President Nixon is said to have decided while a young lawyer in OPA that direct controls were unworkable and harmful. He rejects them today.

For a while, during the war that smelled a price freeze coming began marking up prices. Unions are just as alert to try to nail hourly wage increases at levels high enough to ride out an inflationary storm.

That's one reason why Secretary of Treasury David M. Kennedy was shushed by the White House a year ago when he spoke of ceilings. Presidential advisers feared this would give the alarm and set off anticipatory price-boosting. For the same reason the administration dislikes the proposals for standby control approved by Democrata in the House Banking Committee last week.

McCracken contends it is possible controls can leave a country worse off and tend to result in fiscal laziness about finding a basic cure for the real problems behind the imbalances of supply and demand

Legistlation, Love Mix In England

By COLLIN HARROW

LONDON (AP) - Member ship in the House of Lords is becoming increasingly a family A former Conservative legislator, Lady Priscilla Tweedsmuir, 65, was made a life peer this week, Her 59-year-old husband Lord Tweedsmuir, a hereditary baron, regularly takes his seat in the Lords and now his wife will join him there. This brings to a half dozen the total of husband-and-wife teams entitled to sit in the country's oldest legislating body. There are also a couple of mother-and-son combinations

These include Britain's oldest aristocrat, the 95-year-old Countess of Kintore, and Viscount Stonehaven, 62. The countess has never in fact taken her seat. Like most of the feminine halves of the House of Lords couples, she inherited a title from her own family as well as wedding For Lady Priscilla Tweedmuir working with her husband will be no new experience. At one time both were British delegates to the Assembly of the Council of Europe.

"I remember on one occasion we voted in opposite directions on the same motion and everybody thought we had a tiff," she says. "They were most relieved when we voted together on the next resolution." While she was in the House of Commons, Lady Priscilla, called "Pickles" by her friends, still managed to work with her husband. In 1955 she steered the Protection of Birds Act through Commons and her husband took charge of it in the Lords. In the case of two of the mar-

Let's Not Reform In Panic

The possible lobbying help contributed by new panic over what George Wallace may be able to do to the Electoral College in 1972 will not add one lots to the basic soundness and wisdom of any reform that is adopted.

And a possible turn toward the direct election of the President, by popular vote as if from one great single national oting district, still represents, in the American political system the most deeply, a rash and radical leap from one potential shadow of an evil into a truly perilous unknown.

The first basic unsoundness of any special hurry over reform of the Electoral College system now is that it is seldom wise, in politics, to try to change the rules just because the rules, as they have always stood, suddenly seem to be ready to operate to the advantage of somebody we don't like. To change the rules just to deal with Wallace, just to strip him of the possible power he may be accumulating under the existing rules of the game, shows a timidity which is likely to strengthen the power Wallace can acand whatever system we maintain.

All too often, when hysteria takes over discovered that law-making tailored to bar one evil potential development tilts itself so much that it opens the door to one originally being guarded against. We should not rush to substitute any-cause we are afraid of George Wallace. We should go for change only after we are sure we have devised a new system which can persuade us that it has a chance of working out well through a whole variety of possible political thing for the Electoral College just be-developments and accidents. To try to elect a President by direct popular vote might be to hand the control of the election to some small-time hoodlum in some one crooked ward. The potential system we most respect would be one in which the machinery of the Electoral College would be retained, but the system of election to it be changed so that each state's delegation would reflect the percentage of the popular vote cast in that state for each

Such a system should come out as a duplication, in result, of any direct popular vote, but with some saving insulation against both corruption itself and interminable after-election allegations Let's not legislate for Wallace, or tailor our system to the fact that he happens to be on the national scene If we choose an election reform, let's choose it because it seems to us to have a real sound chance of working better than what we already have. And if we can't be fairly sure that what we would get would not be better than the imperfection we have, let's keep the imperfection a while longer.

Non-Hippies And The War

One directs Mr. Agnew's attention to curious circumstance that one Charles B. McCoy, president of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc. and one Thomas J. Watson, Jr. chairman of the board of the International Business Machines Corporation, have been taking to the platform and denouncing the war

He might, for instance, call them the "dis mal disciples of tired ideas, tired blood and tired wealth." And they do seem, of course, to be members of that "Eastern Establishment" which all the true virilities of the Nixon Administration hold in such disrepute.

Nevertheless, we would like to see the Vice President make the effort to deal with Messrs. McCoy and Watson.
