Gardner files suit in federal court

James Gardner, the Manchester Community College lecturer dismissed from his job last year without being given a reason, is going to federal court to regain the job and seek $200,000 in damages.

Gardner said today a lawsuit has been filed in the U.S. District Court at Hartford, naming as defendants 17 persons: Ronald Denison, MCC president; Searle Charles, executive director of the state community college system; and 15 members of the Board of Trustees of the Regional Community Colleges.

Gardner was notified verbally on April 18, 1975, that his annual lecturer's contract would not be renewed by MCC. He was also told his summer school job was terminated, but he was given no reason for the dismissal.

He had been a non-tenured lecturer, paid at the rank of an associate professor, since 1969.

Gardner said the dismissal seriously damaged his professional reputation and jeopardized his chances for other employment. He said he taught two courses in 1975-1976 at Western Connecticut College, Danbury, and is still drawing unemployment compensation.

MCC President Denison couldn't be reached for comment today.

Ford discrimination stand said illegal

FARMINGTON (UPI) - President Ford is taking an illegal and immoral position supporting a school's right to discriminate if it doesn't get federal aid, says former Watergate Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox.

"If I were in the position of the President's secretary general I would take the position the law prohibits such discrimination," he said. "I think certainly it's wrong morally."

Ford said this weekend he favors parents being able to send their children to private segregated schools as long as those institutions didn't get taxpayer funds.

"I think it is unfortunate he has taken the position he has, partly because it slows the process of bringing equality and parity to our schools."

Carter on edge of nomination; Republican contest still close

By ARNOLD SAWISLAK United Press International

Jimmy Carter was poised today at the brink of a first ballot Democratic nomination for president, and President Ford narrowly edged Ronald Reagan in the still close Republican race.

Carter, who said today he can pick up the remaining 373 delegates he needs without promising anything to anybody, apparently is getting the support of such party stalwarts as Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley and George Wallace, whose quest for the nomination Carter shattered in Florida and North Carolina three months ago.

At California, Ohio and New Jersey cleaned up vote counting from the last of the 32 Bicentennial year primaries Tuesday, Carter had 1,122 delegates according to UPI's count - he claimed more than 1,250 and Ford had 914 of the 1,130 required for the GOP nomination. Reagan had 857 with another 203 uncommitted.

Carter said today he had been in contact with Daley, Wallace and other defeated candidates. He refused comment on whether he discussed Wallace's 160 delegates, an indication they are likely to swing over to him.

Daley, who controls at least 86 of Illinois' delegates, said of Carter before the results were in: "If he wins in Ohio, he'll walk in under his own power. He'll be the candidate."

Daley, long a party kingmaker, also ended any speculation he might back Hubert Humphrey - who has promised another reassessment of his non-candidacy - by saying, "Our show will be in Center Park from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. The town highway department supplies the snow fencing for display purposes. (Herald photo by Pinto)

Asked what he was prepared to give other candidates in return for support of their delegates, Carter said: "I don't believe I would have to promise anything at all. We have a close enough number now to acquire 1,200 so that the natural inclination of their delegates will be to come to me. So I don't envision having to do anything at all."

Carter with a big victory in Ohio, was ahead 800 delegates ahead of the closest Democrat, even though he was swamped by Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. in California and lost to an uncommitted state backing Brown and Humphrey in New Jersey.

Resolution of intent adopted to protecting block grant

By SOL R. COHEN (Herald Reporter)

To satisfy HUD (federal Department of Housing and Urban Development) rules under the Community Development Act, to protect Manchester's claim to a $901,000 block grant under the act and to meet a June 10 deadline given the town to prove it is complying with fair and open housing requirements, the Board of Directors Tuesday night adopted a "resolution of intent."

Basically, the resolution states that the town has been doing, is doing and will continue to do everything within its power to comply with Title 8 of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, namely, action to further fair and open housing in the sale, brokering and financing of open and fair housing.

The statement must include the assurance that the town is conducting an education program for buyers, sellers, the Board of Realtors, financial institutions, the Human Relations Commission, Cable TV, the Children's Advisory Committee, the Planning and Zoning Commission and all other persons or agencies involved.

The educational and informational program is to be disseminated by the town manager's office.

The reason for the board's hurried action Tuesday night is that Hartford area HUD director Lawrence L. Thompson Monday rejected Town Manager Robert Weiss' latest assurance the town is complying with Title 8 (Civil Rights Act of 1968) requirements.

He, Weiss and several directors met Tuesday afternoon and reviewed the situation. Thompson gave the town to June 10 (Thursday) to come up with a statement of what specific steps it would undertake to qualify for the $901,000 Community Development block grant. He indicated the type of resolution considered and passed by the board Tuesday night would be acceptable.

Your help is needed

For a community to qualify as a Bicentennial Community, it must do three things. One project must relate to the preserving of the community's heritage. Manchester is relocating the Keeney St. School to a site near the historic Cheney Homestead to meet this requirement. Another is a festival event which by all appearances will be more than adequately covered by the tremendous Bicentennial Parade to be staged here Saturday. That leaves the third aspect of making Manchester a Bicentennial Community worthy of flying the Bicentennial flag — a project in the Horizons category to provide posterity with some tangible reminder of the nation's 200th birthday.

The Manchester Bicentennial Commission has adopted the construction of a Manchester Amphitheater on the Manchester Community College campus to meet this goal.

And it is this aspect of our Bicentennial celebration where we, the citizens of Manchester, seem to be dragging our feet. Only slightly more than $3,200 of an estimated $50,000 needed has been contributed to the project.

Manchester people have been more than generous in the past to many other worthy charities and projects in the community. It is hard to understand the slowness of response to an amphitheater fund appeal.

We understand there are plans to go ahead with or without funds in hand; but we think it would be more fitting and proper for the project to be launched this year with most of the funds raised or pledged.

The news from the South caused General Washington to dispatch 1,200 Continentals to aid the Virginia militia. To command the expedition, the commander-in-chief named one of his favorite officers, the Marquis de Lafayette.

When he arrived at Baltimore, Lafayette borrowed on his own credit to buy shoes, hats, and other supplies for his ragamuffin men. Charming the ladies of the town, who gave a ball for him, the successful Frenchman got the women to make shirts for the soldiers.

Soon he moved the troops to Annapolis and from there to Richmond, all the while writing to both civil and military officials, drumming up additional help. When Governor Jefferson wrote him that Virginia had "mild laws and a people not used to prompt obedience," Lafayette emphasized the shortage of supplies and declared "uncommon dangers require uncommon remedies." He would take what was needed, if it was not freely given.

While these events were taking place General Cornwallis had marched his 1,500 British regulars from Wilmington, N.C. to join forces with Arnold at Petersburg, Va., May 20. As more troops arrived Cornwallis had an army of over 7,000 men.

Force strengthened
 On the other side General Lafayette's force was strengthened by Virginia militia including some impressive frontier riflemen. The Americans were still too weak to challenge the British, however.

Lafayette wrote to Washington: "I am determined to skirmish but not to engage too far." As the American commander, called "the boy general" by Cornwallis, sparred with the enemy, he "danced away" in time to avoid a general engagement that probably would have been fatal. In June 1781 Lafayette was joined by 1,000 Pennsylvania Continentals under General Anthony Wayne. This did not give the Americans superior strength by any means, but it enabled them to stay closer to the enemy and control destructive raids.

By June 15 Cornwallis had returned to Richmond and begun the march down the peninsula between the James and York Rivers to Williamsburg. He had decided to move closer to the sea where he could maintain better communication with the British in New York. Lafayette followed at a safe distance.

Disliked Cornwallis
 Sir Henry Clinton, the commander-in-chief of British forces in America, was in New York. He disliked Lord Cornwallis, who operated pretty much as he pleased, and he disagreed with the conduct of the war in the South. The whole Virginia campaign, Clinton thought, was pointless and futile.

Wasn't New York City the most strategic location in America? General Clinton believed that Washington would strike there, and he felt it was his duty to hold the place at all cost. When Clinton learned that a strong French fleet with many troops was sailing for America, he was determined to strengthen his position.

Consequently, Clinton urged Cornwallis to fortify a defensive position on Chesapeake Bay, leave a garrison at sea, and bring the bulk of his army to New York. Despite the wishes of his superior, Cornwallis refused to follow this plan. He wrote Clinton that if all the British forces were not left in Virginia, none at all should be left there; and he made plans to cross the James River and march to Portsmouth preparatory to sailing for New York.

Before he was able to carry this out, Cornwallis received additional instructions from the commander-in-chief. The latter having received advice from Britain that he should be more active in the Chesapeake area, now informed his subordinate that he must establish a base on Yorktown peninsula.

Idled time away
 With this word the British began to erect fortification in early August, not only to Yorktown but also at Gloucester on the northern shore of the York River. Lord Cornwallis idled away some two months in the heat of summer at this work, hoping that reinforcements would arrive any day by sea.

His lordship seemed not to realize it, but he was, in reality, waiting for combined American and French forces to surround him.

General Lafayette learned in early August 1781 that a French fleet under Admiral de Grasse was approaching Chesapeake Bay. If he could only keep the British in Yorktown, they would be in a trap.

Establishing a line across the peninsula near Williamsburg, he vowed to Washington that he would do all he could to keep Cornwallis bottled up. Washington not inactive.

While these momentous events were taking place in Virginia, General Washington had hardly been inactive. In the early summer he had urged on Count Rochambeau, the commander of French Troops, a joint assault on New York. When he learned that Admiral de Grasse was heading for Chesapeake Bay with 3,000 men, the American commander-in-chief now saw clearly that the allies had better move swiftly to take advantage of the chance to capture Cornwallis and his army.

 Ravaging the James River country and raiding the interior of Virginia in early 1781, British forces burned both public and private buildings, destroyed a great quantity of commodities, and captured much military equipment. After relating these events, the New-Jersey Gazette of Jan. 31, tersely noted, "The enemy's forces are commanded by the parricide Arnold."

The news from the South caused General Washington to dispatch 1,200 Continentals to aid the Virginia militia. To command the expedition, the commander-in-chief named one of his favorite officers, the Marquis de Lafayette. Lafayette, a young French nobleman who had volunteered his services in 1777, Congress had made Lafayette a major general without command, and the red-haired, excitable, enthusiastic Frenchman had quickly won the respect and affection of Washington.

Little change for glory
 Although command of the mission to bolster Virginia's defenses seemed to offer little chance to win glory, Lafayette undertook the task energetically. Little did he know at the time that he was to be prominent in the last great campaign of the American Revolution.

When he arrived at Baltimore, Lafayette borrowed on his own credit to buy shoes, hats, and other supplies for his ragamuffin men. Charming the ladies of the town, who gave a ball for him, the successful Frenchman got the women to make shirts for the soldiers.

Soon he moved the troops to Annapolis and from there to Richmond, all the while writing to both civil and military officials, drumming up additional help. Cornwallis blocked off
 After the arrival of the French fleet and French reinforcements for Lafayette, Lord Cornwallis was not nearly so confident. He was blocked at sea, but he hoped a British fleet would soon drive the French out of Chesapeake Bay. The army might be able to break through Lafayette's force, but certainly not without severe losses. And if the British did get through, they would have to march through hostile territory whichever way they turned.

Surrender comes
 The capitulation took place at Yorktown, Oct. 19, 1781. British troops marched out to lay down their arms between the lives of allies, the French in their splendid white linen, the Americans somewhat shabby but still respectable in appearance.

Lafayette taunts British
 Throughout the ceremony the British troops had their eyes fixed upon the French. To lay down his arms to French gentlemen was one thing; to surrender to American peasants was humiliating. In keeping with their gloom, a British band played, "The World Turned Upside Down" as Lafayette, however, ordered an American band to taunt the British with "Yankee Doodle."

Escape route shut off
 The allied forces strengthened their lines and shut off all escape routes by land for the enemy. As the Americans and French moved closer to Yorktown, their heavy artillery opened a bombardment of the town. Cornwallis made several futile efforts to escape; and he clung to the slim hope that help would arrive from New York.

General Clinton had of course become aware of the desperate plight of the British at Yorktown. When he finally set sail on Oct. 17, he did not have a strong fleet. How Clinton was going to force his way into Chesapeake Bay against superior French naval strength was a question never answered. Before the relief expedition arrived, Lord Cornwallis had surrendered. Yorktown's defenses had been shattered by the allied bombardment. Charles Stedman, a contemporary British historian, wrote, "By the force of the enemy's cannonade the British works were tumbling into ruin; not a gun could be fired from them." In the face of this Cornwallis asked to negotiate; Washington demanded and got the complete surrender of the enemy.

Throughout the ceremony the British troops had their eyes fixed upon the French. To lay down his arms to French gentlemen was one thing; to surrender to American peasants was humiliating. In keeping with their gloom, a British band played, "The World Turned Upside Down" as Lafayette, however, ordered an American band to taunt the British with "Yankee Doodle."

Demonstrations, celebrations, broadsides, and newspapers everywhere greeted the glorious news of the victory at Yorktown. As the word spread through cheer, offered prayers of thanks, fired salutes, drank toasts and held banquets expressing their joy. Many believed with justification that this would mean the end of the war.

Not to be forgotten was the invaluable aid provided by the French in this great hour of triumph. And Americans would forever remember the courageous and capable role played in the decisive Yorktown campaign by that enthusiastic volunteer, the Marquis de Lafayette.

Why must the youth always be last?
 To the editor,
 Can someone please tell me why must the youth of our town always have to march in the last unit of the Memorial Day Parade?
 This is the question asked of me while I stood awaiting the setup of the parade to Center Park. There some parents concerned about this matter.
 This year a new youth group appeared in the line of march and still were placed before the scouts. Why can't someone else take a turn in marching last?
 I realize that the children are not perfect in marching but they do have the spirit, and I think as many others do, a little music instead of our ambulance's siren behind them, they could make it.
 I also hope that when the children march on June 12, that they will be placed so as to give them a chance to see some of the parade.
 Yours in scouting

Scene from here
Barbering not always dull

I see by the papers where an Italian barber last week claimed a new world record for non-stop hair-cutting. He snipped about 200 heads in 83 hours, surpassing by three hours an old mark set in 1972 by a British barber.
 Red-eyed and aching, not to mention about as pale as a ghost, he briefly collapsed but was revived in time to announce to the world, "I'm happy. It's been a long grind but the record is mine."
 During his performance, Pina Amato was attended by a doctor, a masseur and a dietician. The first checked his blood pressure, the second soothed his aching muscles and the third fed him vegetables and yogurt every three hours.
 The Britisher whose record he beat had the very proper name of Derek Applegate Rees. Him they fed pasta every three hours.
 I told the story to my friendly barber last Saturday and he scoffed. "Two hundred haircuts in 83 hours is one every 25 minutes," he pointed out. "Who can't beat that?"
 He's right, you know. Even one 25-minute haircut would be a record for him. I don't remember the last time it took him more than 10 minutes to cut mine.
 "And besides," he went on, "how about all those guys mistaking Telly Savalas? How long do you suppose it takes to give them a haircut?"
 My friendly barber is a throwback to those days when a barber shop was a place for good fellowship, so-so gossip and bad advice — oh yes, and a haircut.
 Those were the days when every barber fancied himself a psychoanalyst. I assume you all know what a psychoanalyst is. For those of you who don't (know or care), a psychoanalyst is a doctor who hates the sight of blood.
 My friendly barber runs a friendly shop. He listens to the problems of the young, the hopes and accomplishments of those starting to make their way and the disappointments of the middle-aged and aged.
 He's got the reputation for lending a listening ear and sometimes a spare buck.
 He's helped many a youngster and older over a hard time and, as a consequence, he had more calls for help than he could handle.
 Once, a customer asked my friendly barber for a $25 loan, to tide him over a rough period (the customer's, not my barber's, although my barber too needed to be tided over now and then). He (the customer) said the $25 checked his blood pressure, the second it took him more than 10 minutes to cut mine.
 Well, my friendly barber has had many such requests and he's been stuck many times.
 There were countless days when everyone was letting his hair grow long and not even thinking of my friendly barber. Those were the days when he'd go home with empty pockets to an empty refrigerator.
 To get on with the story, this particular time he said, "No, I can't lend you any money. You still owe me from the last time and you still owe me for three haircuts for your two kids and yourself."
 Claiming he was desperate, the young man offered to sell my friendly barber a Coleman stove "at a cutrate price."
 My friendly barber, who knows a bargain when he sees one, bought the stove for $15.
 A few days later, finding himself with empty pockets and knowing his wife was home with an empty refrigerator, he offered to sell the stove to a friend who needed one for a camping trip.
 He produced the stove and his friend was just about to turn over the $15 when both noticed the price tag — plainly in sight on the still-unopened carton.
 It read $11.98.
 Did my friendly barber learn a lesson?
 "Sure I did," he said the last time I saw him, "I'm now cooking with gas."

Torbeck really saying it with flowers

ALTAHONT, Ill. (UPI) — Edward Torbeck has tucked several dozen ever so slightly boozey begonias, alcoholic alternanthera, polluted petunias, stinko santolinas and ebriated echeveria to bed in a happy birthday to America.

Torbeck, 76, a retired barber, says it with flowers on an inclined 12-by-15-foot bed in the corner of his front yard in this community.

"What he has grown is a floral design. Replanted because of a late frost, it has 2,816 plants which Torbeck started in a small greenhouse back of his home.

The design includes two crossed commercial American flags at the top with part of an eagle and the words "Long May It Wave" lettered in alternanthera.

A birthday cake inscribed "Happy Birthday USA" dominates the design and is bordered by hanging floral baskets and two 100-year birthday candles.

"It took 953 santolinas to make the icing on the cake," said Torbeck with a smile.

Torbeck believes he has the happiest plants in town. "I give them a drink of beer once a month," he said. "But even plants can get potted. 'You can't give them too much or they'll wilt just like people,'" said Torbeck. "I give them a mixture of one part beer to 30 to 40 parts water.

"I find that the beer solution makes them start blooming earlier and makes the blooms larger," he said.

He said he got the beer rations idea from a magazine article he read some years ago.

Torbeck bartered in Altamont and St. Louis before retiring in 1968 and moving back to Altamont. In St. Louis, his floral designs included one of the baseball St. Louis Cardinals' insignia, a clock and a St. Louis Bicentennial design.

His floral offerings in Altamont have included an American flag with the inscription "God Bless America" and a floral calendar with a daily change of dates.

Last year it was a flag of the 13 original states with their abbreviated names.

"About 2,000 people stop by every summer to have a look, several of them from out state," said Torbeck. "And I don't even count them unless they stop and talk awhile."

State anti-litter law enforcement urged

HARTFORD (UPI) — Rep. Astrid Hanzalek, R-Suffield, pointing to the state's almost $1 million annual bill to clean up highways, wants anti-litter laws better enforced.

"The Department of Transportation estimates it spends nearly $1 million per year for direct costs of litter pickup along state highways," she said.

"This is a terrible waste of both money and manpower. We have many state programs that have been denied badly needed funds because of fiscal problems in the state," Mrs. Hanzalek said.

"Certainly the million dollars being used for trash pickup could have better served our citizens by supporting these programs," she added.

Mrs. Hanzalek said along with enforcing the penalties for littering and working for a change in the public attitude towards littering, serious consideration should be given to banning non-returnable bottles.

A bill to ban non-returnables was narrowly defeated this year in the state Senate. It has been a hotly debated legislative issue for the past three sessions.

Church fiscally sound

BOSTON (UPI) — The Christian Science Church is in good financial shape, despite rumors to the contrary, according to its treasurer.

"The Mother Church has emerged from a world-wide recession in strong financial shape, with a sounder structure of income and a wider base of support," Marc Engeler told the church's 81st annual meeting.

Some 10,000 members of the Christian Science Church in 57 nations are attending the three day meeting at the church's world headquarters located in the city's downtown.

Naomi Price of London, England, an associate editor of the Christian Science periodicals, was named president of the Mother Church for the coming year.

Uruguayan ambassador killed by mistake

ASUNCION, Paraguay (UPI) — Uruguay's ambassador to Paraguay, Carlos Abdala, died Thursday from a bullet wound suffered when an anti-Communist Yugoslav mistook him for the Yugoslav ambassador. Abdala's coffin was placed in state in Paraguay's government palace. But in Uruguay the foreign ministry said the remains would be brought home for burial. Abdala was shot once in the head in Asuncion, Paraguay, by Yugoslav Danzav Danjanovic, 39, who just as he opened fire, shouted "Free Croatia, Death to Communism." Police said it was a case of mistaken identity. Danjanovic's real target was Yugoslav ambassador Mancillo Vuceovic who was expected in the same area, in downtown Asuncion, at approximately the same time as Abdala. Police said that the two ambassadors have the same model cars, painted the same color—facts which only helped Danjanovic's mistake Abdala for Vuceovic. Danjanovic, who was arrested on the spot, said: "I did it for the freedom of my country." According to police sources Vuceovic asked for special police protection soon after his arrival in Asuncion because of a series of threats he had received.

WORLD ALMANAC FACTS

Highway littering is an unsightly and expensive problem which can be resolved only by individual efforts of restraint. Recently highway officials in Illinois have computed that it costs the state about 83 cents to pick up, collect and dispose of an empty can or bottle littering a highway. The World Almanac notes.

Consumerists disrupt hearing on reforms

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Consumer representatives, signs in their hands and gags in their mouths, disrupted a meeting at the Agriculture Department Tuesday to protest what they said was an attempt to silence their voice in regulatory reform.

The 17 demonstrators marched into the opening session of a committee formed to review Agriculture Department rules as part of the administration's reform effort. The Consumer Federation of America and other groups involved in the protest claimed the panel was formed with no consumer representative, except for a vice president of one supermarket chain.

The eight-member panel was established in March by Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butts. It scheduled its first meeting Tuesday to review existing programs ranging from meat and poultry inspection to marketing order for milk, fruits and vegetables, and to decide which of the operations it intends to "evaluate."

The demonstrators filed silently into the room as Donald E. Wilkinson, administrator of the Agricultural Marketing Service, was briefing the panel about his work.

With bandannas tied across their mouths they stood staring while Wilkinson kept talking. Their signs ranged from "Earl Butts Silences Consumers" and "Butts Wants Us Mute But We're Going to Speak" to "Butts Gag Leaves Us Speechless."

Finally Carol Foreman, head of the consumer federation, removed her gag and shouted, "We wrote two months ago but you haven't been polite enough to respond to our letter. Your whole first meeting will have taken place without consumer representation."

Just before the demonstration began, Jane Armstrong, vice president for consumer affairs of the Jewel Food Stores, Chicago, and the nominal consumer representative on the panel, introduced a resolution that the committee be expanded to nine members to make room for a "grass roots consumer representative."

NYC to reclaim metallic trash

NEW YORK (UPI) — In an undertaking Mayor Abraham Beame said will be the first of its kind in the United States, New York City has agreed to sell its metallic garbage to a metal recycling company to be converted into commercial-grade steel.

The mayor has signed a contract with the Ashmont Metal Co., which will build a $12 million plant in Southwest Brooklyn which will magnetically extract all raw ferrous metals from garbage and recycle it with a non-polluting refining furnace.

The mayor said the plant is expected to open in about 18 months. Beame said the city is earmarking about 4,000 square feet of city property for Ashmont's separation equipment.

The city will be paid $2 for each ton of metal Ashmont extracts, and Ashmont said it expects to produce 400 tons of "high quality steel" daily.

While the city's profit will be only about $35,000 a year at first, the mayor said the plant will reduce the need for shipping garbage, reduce landfill needs by 25,000 tons a year, generate as many as 100 new jobs and eventually be a local source of steel.

He also said that if more cities developed this plan, the United States could cut its steel imports in half. American companies import about 40 per cent of the iron ore they need, he said.

The mayor also cited energy savings, increased industrial productivity and decreased pollution from widespread use of such plants.

'Killer bee' bill passed by Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A bill aimed at keeping out of the United States a hybrid strain of "killer bees" is on its way to the White House.

The house has completed congressional action on the bill to ban the importation of honeybees and to join an international effort to destroy the unusually aggressive strain of "Africanized" bees heading toward the United States.

The bees were created in Brazil by interbreeding with a strain of honeybees imported from Africa.

A National Academy of Sciences report said in 1972: "Because of its unprovoked mass stinging and because of frequent swarming and abandoning, the Brazilian honeybee is dangerous to people and animals and is difficult to manage."

The academy said the African bee, unless checked, could reach the U.S. border in four to six years. It is moving at the rate of 200 miles a year.

The bill would forbid importing honeybees except under specified conditions, and authorize the agriculture secretary to cooperate with other states, farm organizations and the governments of Mexico, Colombia, Canada and Central American countries to eradicate and control the species.

Getty may not get last wish granted

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Unless the body of billionaire J. Paul Getty is cremated he may not get his last wish, to be buried beside his art collection on a Malibu bluff overlooking the Pacific.

The county health department said regulations forbid the family to bury Getty's body where he wished, near the ocean-side art museum he built but never saw.

Getty's body was to be shipped here from London this week. But uncertainty surrounded the final disposition of his remains, apparently on orders from his family, who wished details of the burial kept private.

"You probably never will find out what happens to the body," a source connected with the funeral arrangements told UPI when asked whether the body would be cremated or buried someplace else.

"The family prefers it that way," Getty, who parlayed $5,000 into a personal worth of more than $1 billion and a family fortune of $10 billion to $20 billion, died at age 83 Sunday in his 16th century English manor.

In his late years, he often said he wanted to "go back to live in California," but never returned.

"I'll live in Malibu again and see the waves I used to surf in when I was younger and see the beautiful vegetation of California — I was always happiest there."

He asked to be buried on the Malibu bluff where he built a $20 million museum, a reconstruction of a Roman villa filled with art treasures of the ancient world, open to the public.

He never saw the museum, built after he took up residence in England, but defended it vigorously from critics.

Authorities said health regulations forbid burials outside of an approved cemetery, but that if Getty were cremated the family could inter the ashes as they wish.

Housing discrimination:
Next step in civil rights?

DAVID K. ANDERSON, WASHINGTON (UPI) — In 1974, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights issued a report charging that while suburbanization was creating a situation of increased racial separation and polarization.

Two years later, according to civil rights groups, the situation has not changed any for the better but rights lawyers believe they may now have the means to challenge in the courts discriminatory suburban housing.

Indeed, housing could turn out to be the crucial civil rights issue of the last half of the decade because other issues — like school desegregation and busing — hinge on it.

If heretofore segregated suburbs were opened up for black families, for example, it would alleviate the need for busing to achieve racial integration.

projects could be forced on localities that do not want them — but it provides an important precedent for rights groups seeking metropolitan-wide relief in areas of discrimination.

With those cases behind them, rights groups have started to move in another field of housing discrimination — regulation of the home mortgage lending industry which in 1974 handled $310 billion in residential mortgage loans.

In late April, a coalition of 10 civil rights, religious and civic groups filed a suit against the four federal agencies which regulate the industry charging them with failing to carry out their responsibilities to prevent race and sex discrimination in home mortgage lending.

The suit charges the regulated institutions refuse to make loans to minorities to purchase homes in white areas, refuse to lend in racially integrated areas because of the racial composition and use loan criteria that have a discriminatory impact on minorities and women.

The federal agencies — Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Federal Reserve Board, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board have failed to end these practices even though it is within their power to do so, the suit charges.

None of those involved, however, believes that ending residential segregation will be achieved easily. The court cases are only the first step in a long march.

Rights groups point to three recent court decisions that they believe will provide the precedents for a sustained challenge to segregated housing.

The cases are a Supreme Court decision involving Chicago and two New Jersey cases, the latter which struck down local zoning ordinances prohibiting low and moderate income housing.

Although the New Jersey decisions affect only that state, rights lawyers will use them in other suits with the hope that other state courts will find their arguments persuasive.

In the Chicago case, the Supreme Court held that black Chicago residents, confined to subsidized inner city housing because of discriminatory practices supported in part by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, are entitled to court-ordered remedies that would extend outside the city to include six counties.

The court said that the "relevant" geographic area for blacks seeking housing was not the Chicago city limits but the "Chicago housing market" and that HUD, because it operates in housing markets and not just within the city limits should attempt to foster low income housing projects throughout the market.

The impact of the Chicago decision may be limited — the court said it did not intend that housing

Ethics group may require more funds

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Ethics Committee may need extra funds to investigate the case of Rep. Wayne Hays, charged with hiring Elizabeth Ray on his committee payroll only to be his mistress.

Rep. John Flynn, D-Ga., ethics chairman, said his committee has not yet decided whether it will need additional personnel or money. But he has introduced a resolution which would permit the panel to draw directly from a House contingency fund if necessary.

The color of the spectrum may be produced by viewing a light beam refracted by passage through a prism, which breaks the light into its wave lengths. Customarily the six primary colors of the spectrum are thought of as red, orange, yellow, green, blue and violet.

Graduation party won't be repeated

MENTOR, Ohio (UPI) — Frank Burke threw a big graduation party for his son, but warned his other children not to expect the same.

Recalling the Saturday night fling, Burke said things got a little out of hand when about 1,000 teenagers showed up and "scared the hell out of my neighbors."

"It was quite a thing," said Burke. "Everybody in Lake County came whether they were invited or not. Jesse it was impossible. I didn't know hardly any of them."

"The kids brought their own stuff and they got loaded," he said. "Then the police came. But that's fun to them at that age."

"I scared the hell out of my neighbors," said Burke. "I don't blame them. I was scared too. I got on a loudspeaker and told them the party was ended and was getting out hand," he said.

Burke, a chemist, has nine sons and a daughter, but about future graduation parties he said, "I'm never going to have another one."

Ford gives some world leaders a big boost

By WALTER LOGAN, UPI Foreign Editor

President Ford's call for a June 27-28 economic summit conference in Puerto Rico has fallen like manna from heaven on several world leaders seeking a dramatic way out of deep political trouble.

First and foremost is Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Miki, who is fighting for political survival in a country deeply shaken by a Lockheed payoff scandal.

A move to visit Miki has already appeared in his own Liberal Democratic party, and his opponents say he is going to Puerto Rico principally to try to prolong his political life.

French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing's image has been tarnished by recent economic difficulties in France and his political opponents say he called a similar Rambouillet economic conference last fall only to boost his political image.

The pro-Giscard Paris newspaper Figaro shrugged off Giscard's involvement this time with the comment that the Puerto Rican summit "seems more related to American electoral strategy" than to world economic and monetary problems.

Ford, if not in deep political trouble, is in at least a neck and neck race with Ronald Reagan for the Republican presidential nomination.

He called the meeting less than two months before the Republican National Convention.

British Prime Minister James Callaghan may be in even more trouble with a labor party struggle under a major financial crisis that has seen the crippled pound sterling take its worst clobbering in history.

Within weeks, perhaps days,

Callaghan must take a crucial decision whether to try to impose a new package of drastic spending cuts and risk taking a shellacking from his own Labor party supporters.

And the Conservative opposition has pledged all out war against Labor's attempts at a 4% per cent ceiling on pay hikes.

Italy is in such political — and financial — turmoil it is not even certain who will attend the summit. Logically it would be the premier, but who will be premier after the June 30 elections is in doubt.

If the Christian Democrats come out on top, caretaker Premier Aldo Moro is the likely choice to form the new government. If a Communist-Socialist coalition emerges, there could be a Socialist premier.

Whoever emerges will be in trouble with Italy's staggering economic problems.

Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau is in better shape, but a recent Gallup Poll shows Trudeau at his lowest popularity level since taking over as prime minister in 1968. Some of the contributing factors include the introduction of anti-inflationary wage, price and profit controls and a scandal involving a cabinet minister who allegedly interfered in a Quebec Superior Court case.

The world leader in the best shape is West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who is firmly in power. There are no rivals seeking his job in his Social Democratic party.

Public opinion polls show Schmidt is even more popular than his party. And West German recovery from the recession has enhanced his position. But with German elections in October the trip will do him no harm.

Bard on the Hill:
Love's Labor Lost

By DICK WEST

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The current ballaboo over sex on Capitol Hill has developed faint Biblical and Platonic overtones.

Some of the lawmakers are taking the position that reporters who cast stones at their love lives should themselves be above suspicion.

Most of us would have to be dead to meet that criterion. Therefore, I have solicited the views of a writer long since in his grave, the late William Shakespeare.

Q. As you know, sir, Rep. Wayne Hays has admitted having a "personal relationship" with a young woman on his congressional payroll. What was your reaction to that disclosure?

A. "A lion among ladies is a most dreadful thing. Like a puff'd and reckless libertine, himself the primrose path of dalliance treads, and he falls thereon." Q. Did it surprise you that Hays, who is 65, would be having an affair at his age?

A. "Men are April when they woo. Why should a man whose blood is warm within, sit like his grandeur cut in alabaster?"

Q. Well, his alleged mistress, Elizabeth Ray, is only 33. Why would she take up with someone as old as Hays?

A. "A woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart."

Q. That's Hays, all right. His case is now being investigated by the House Ethics Committee. Based on the committee's previous work, what do you predict the outcome will be?

A. "They'll give him death by inches."

Q. Wouldn't it be ironic if Hays, who was instrumental in ousting the late Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, met a similar fate?

A. "Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall. He who the sword of heaven will bear should be as holy as severe."

Q. The main point of contention is whether Miss Ray did any work. Could you describe her qualifications?

A. "An unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd."

Q. Isn't $14,000 a year quite a lot to pay an office worker who can't even type?

A. "You pay a great deal too dear for what's given freely."

Q. Miss Ray isn't alone. There have been recent cases of women claiming to have had affairs with presidents.

A. "How hard it is for women to keep conceal. Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women."

Q. Is it true that the Hays case has put certain other members of Congress in a cold sweat?

A. "Distill'd almost to jelly with the act of fear."

Q. Do you believe the rumors that this sort of hanky panky is widespread?

A. "All of his successors gone before him have done't; and all his ancestors that come after him may."

Q. What advice would you give congressmen in these matters?

A. "Speak low, when you speak love. Do not give dalliance too much rein. Love all, trust a few, do wrong to none."

Q. Thank you, Mr. Shakespeare.

Shipyard tieups distress Navy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Navy, whose fleet has shrunk to its smallest size since 1899, is distressed that 71 new ships are tied up in financial knots in shipyards from the East Coast to the Gulf of Mexico.

Comptroller General Elmer Staats told the House Armed Services Committee Tuesday reasons why the yards have fallen behind their delivery dates and are claiming $1.9 billion from the Navy to cover cost overruns.

Deputy Defense Secretary William Clements was summoned Thursday to explain a proposed Pentagon compromise to settle the claims speeding for about $747,000 under a 1968 law.

Adm. Hyman Rickover is trying to force the Navy and Pentagon brass to hold the shipyard conglomerates to their original contracts — and take them to federal court if necessary.

Rickover let fly some choice epithets before the Senate subcommittee on priorities and economy.

Drawing a bead on the patriotism of the shipyard conglomerates, Rickover said:

"The conglomerates are as interested in making ships as they are in manufacturing horse manure." The diminutive, white-haired officer charged that claims turned in by the Newport News shipyard were both fraudulent and inflated. Eying 64 black volumes of claims spanning nearly 10 feet across the committee bench, Rickover said:

"No one has ever looked through all these claims except the people who compiled them... I think this could be one of the biggest ripoffs in the history of the United States."

"The fact that they (the shipyards) are willing to settle for half, shows that these are not walk," he said.

Governors, premiers adopt energy policy

CHATHAM, Mass. (UPI) — New England governors and eastern Canadian premiers have agreed on a nine-point resolution for a joint effort to solve their common energy problems.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire was the one to vote against the resolution Tuesday saying it was "too much too soon" and defeats the United States goal to reach energy independence by 1980.

Gov. James B. Longley of Maine criticized Thomson's vote and claimed the New Hampshire Republican previously voted in favor of a draft of the resolution. Thomson denied he favored it.

Gov. Philip W. Noel of Rhode Island also criticized Thomson and cited the Nixon administration's "go it alone" energy policy as a failure.

"The United States and Canada should have energy independence," Noel said.

The resolution calls for the governments in each country "to more clearly define their own national energy policies in order to encourage eastern Canadian provinces and New England to undertake such activities as will further the regional objectives."

Among those objectives is the use of solar and hydroelectric power. The resolution calls for "a careful examination" of tidal and hydroelectric and solar energy.

The governors and premiers also participated in a discussion on health care. Dr. Raymond Robillard, president of the Quebec Federation of Medical Specialists, told the group that medical malpractice claims are less of a problem in Canada than in the United States and claimed U.S. courts are more generous than Canadian courts in making malpractice awards.

In other business the governors meeting as members of the New England Regional Commission voted to spend $225,000 of NERCOM funds to aid New England's fishing industry during implementation of the new 200-mile fishing limit and voted to spend $18,000 for programs to "enhance capital development" in the region. More than 600,000 of that amount will be used for an analysis of future labor needs in the six state region.

The governors also reaffirmed their support for location of the federal Solar Energy Research Institute of New England and called for increased participation by the governors in the decision making process of the Federal Energy Research and Development Administration.

Democrat national convention delegate selection is Saturday

By PETER A. BROWN
HARTFORD (UPI) — Connecticut Democrats Saturday complete selection of their national convention delegation, but it won't be reminiscent of the traditional gatherings where party leaders dispensed the posts.

Until this year Democrats named their delegates at a state convention run by the iron hand of the late John M. Bailey, who decided what each presidential candidate would receive.

But the Democratic National Committee, as part of a national reform effort, ordered an end to that and party leaders decided on a two-tier selection system that ended the hand-picking of national convention delegates.

Party leaders — principally Bailey — previously had parceled out delegate spots by negotiating among candidate representatives, but always making sure the big Democratic names were on the delegation.

Under the current system, a May 11 primary selected delegates pledged to various presidential candidates and those representatives meet Saturday in congressional district conventions to name the 51-member national delegation.

The advent of a primary-caucus system forced the big name state political figures to fend for themselves because delegates to the six district conventions for the most part owe no allegiance to party bosses.

Party officials and officeholders, for years held together by Bailey's magic political touch, went their own way.

Spills like the one that saw Gov. Ella T. Grasso and William O'Neill, her handpicked state party chairman, on different sides of the fence were a result.

Most took sides before the primary voting and many found themselves supporting losing candidates, with no John Bailey on hand to make sure they were given a delegate spot anyway.

Even Gov. Ella T. Grasso's status is uncertain because she backed Henry Jackson, who did not do well in the primary.

The leader of Morris Udall's forces isn't sure he can convince enough of his people to go along with a proposed compromise worked out among the candidate representatives to give her a seat.

As a result many of the bigger political names in the state aren't even trying to be delegates and only one member of the state's Democratic-dominated congressional delegation — Jackson supporter Robert Gianno — is seeking a spot.

In their place are persons like Stanley Weinberg and Amy Brennan, who aren't household names in their own neighborhoods and have never held political office.

Weinberg owns a Manchester car wash and has been organizing the state for Jimmy Carter since back when the former Georgia governor's teeth weren't a favorite target of political cartoonists.

Miss Brennan was Udall's state coordinator, having taken time off from her job as a real estate agent to organize a surprisingly strong second-place primary campaign that almost became a major political upset.

(Next: Candidates scramble to pick up as many of the state's 51 delegate spots as possible, with the results expected to be similar — but not a duplicate of the May 11 primary voting.)

New competition considered for Navy F14 fighter engines

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A measure under Congressional consideration could lead to another competition for the right to make Navy F14 fighter engines, now constructed by Pratt and Whitney Aircraft of East Hartford, Conn.

The House Appropriations Committee Tuesday approved a $15 million allotment in the 1977 Defense Appropriations bill to fund the new competition. The F14 is presently powered by twin Pratt and Whitney TF30 aircraft engines originally built for the F111 fighter.

If the House and Senate accept committee recommendation, Pratt and Whitney, a division of United Technologies, probably would face competition with the nation's other major aircraft-engine maker, General Electric Co.

The appropriations committee report said Tuesday the TF30 was a source of "serious difficulties" with the Navy fighter.

It said there were "repeated groundings of the aircraft because of engine problems," but gave no details. The General Accounting office reportedly is preparing a report stating F14's are combat-ready only 97 per cent of the time.

Pratt and Whitney officials believe development work on the F401 engine, hailed by the Navy several years ago as a cost-saving measure, would give it an inside track in a new competition. The F401 is the Navy version of the Air Force F100 engine which powers the F15 "Eagle" fighter jet.

Company officials said the $15 million appropriation indicates "favorable action" to fund an advanced F14 engine.

Mrs. Schaffer urges congressional reforms

WETHERSFIELD (UPI) — Secretary of the State Gloria Schaffer, vying for the Democratic Senate nomination, has called for widespread reforms of Congress.

"The Hays affair has clearly indicated the need for a sweeping reexamination of Congressional employment practices, but staff abuse is scarcely the only skeleton in the congressional closet," Mrs. Schaffer said Tuesday.

Rep. Wayne Hays, D-Ohio, is under investigation for allegedly putting his mistress, Elizabeth Ray, on the congressional payroll at $14,000 a day.

"Far too many national legislators sail off on deluxe free holidays abroad at public expense, or who abuse the franking privileges to promote themselves rather than the electorate," Mrs. Schaffer told the Aetna Women's Club.

She said despite public opposition to the junkets, Congress not only continues the practice but two years ago voted not to release a subcommittee expenditures and therefore hide the costs of the junkets.

Water, sewer rates raised

By a unanimous vote and with no discussion, the Board of Directors Tuesday night approved a 15 per cent hike in Manchester water rates, to be effective July 1. And it pegged sewer charges at 115 per cent of water rates (they now are at 120 per cent), also effective July 1. Because of the change, sewer charges will go up about 10.2 per cent.

Like sewer outlet charges also were approved effective July 1. The board approved assessments against benefitting property owners on the west end of Linwood Dr., where sanitary sewers already are installed, and against benefitting property owners on the north side of E. Middle Tpke., between Plaza Dr. and Ludlow Rd., where sanitary sewers also have been installed.

The levy on Linwood Dr. is at $15.45 per front foot and on E. Middle Tpke. at $1,529.27 per property, both levies to include laterals.

The assessments must be paid in 10 years. However, the first installment may be deferred for five years, with interest charged for the deferred period but with the entire assessment still to be paid in 10 years.

The board authorized the manager to apply for federal and state grants for various improvements to the Secondary Treatment Sewage Plant. Engineering studies already are completed. The actual construction will require a referendum and voter approval.

Unselected delegates may be key to presidential nominations

By CLAY F. RICHARDS
WASHINGTON (UPI) — The primaries are over, but the presidential nominations still may rest with 375 Republican and 135 Democratic delegates not yet selected.

President Ford's hopes of defeating Ronald Reagan for the Republican nomination lie in Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Missouri, Delaware and Iowa.

Reagan, on the other hand, counts on Colorado, Montana, New Mexico, and Washington for help.

Those are the states that either have yet to pick delegates or have significant blocks of uncommitted ones. They are the states that will pick the Republican nominee.

Ford now has 911 delegates and Reagan 868, with 1,130 needed to nominate. Jimmy Carter, with 1,124, was closing in on the magic figure of 1,500.

The Democrats have only 135 delegates left to choose. Delaware will pick 12 at a state convention this weekend, while Missouri is adding the last 17 members of its delegation. Both states are Carter territory.

In the following two weeks, Utah will pick 18, Colorado 35 and North Dakota 13 Carter could be in trouble in all three, if there is anything left of the stop-Carter movement at that time.

The Georgian will get most of the 32 remaining Texas delegates picked June 19. There are a handful of unselected Democratic delegates in other states.

There are 375 delegates left to be chosen at state Republican conventions during June and the first three weeks of July.

The weekend of June 18-19 will be like a big primary day for the two GOP contenders; there are 91 delegates at stake. Ford has hopes of capturing most of Delaware's 17, while Reagan is favored to get most of the 35 in Washington. That leaves Iowa's 36 delegates as the big battleground of the weekend.

Missouri picks another 19 delegates this weekend. To date Ford has won 15, Reagan 12 and three are uncommitted — making this another tossup state.

The last weekend in June is another big one. Montana with 20 delegates and New Mexico with 21 are deep in Reagan territory. Minnesota picks its final 18 delegates, and there Ford is favored. Colorado picks the last 28 of its 31 member delegation July 9-10.

Reagan is favored, but this is one sunbelt state where Ford could make a dent. North Dakota picks its 18 delegates the same weekend and is rated a tossup.

The caucus season ends July 16-17 with 55 GOP delegates up for grabs. Connecticut's 35 are safe for Ford and Utah's 20 seem safe for Reagan.

Then, with a month to go to the Republican national convention, neither Ford nor Reagan is expected to have the 1,130 needed for nomination — putting the burden on the unselected delegates.

Reconstruction work begins in flooded area

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho (UPI) — Army engineers began a $1.7 million emergency levee reconstruction program today to prevent melting mountain snow from reflooding an area deluged in the break of the Teton Dam last weekend.

The 307-foot high dam had been built to control the runoff.

Engineer spokesman Pat King said Tuesday an "emergency flood fight" had been declared, enabling repair work to begin immediately on the ravaged levees.

King said the snowpack is 150 to 160 per cent higher than normal and the "peak runoff from the Snake and Teton Rivers has not occurred."

The $1 billion flood from the dam burst roared through 85 miles of eastern Idaho Saturday.

Authorities Tuesday revised from seven to five the number of flood-caused deaths, not counting heart attacks. They also said 1,277 persons had been treated and released at area hospitals and first aid stations. Nine persons were hospitalized, two in serious condition.

Idaho National Guardsmen searched for some 50 persons still unaccounted for.

A Red Cross spokesman said an incomplete survey of two of the hardest hit areas showed 1,014 homes destroyed, 3,225 more with major damage and 2,630 with minor damage.

In addition, 180 mobile homes were destroyed, 47 damaged, 414 small businesses damaged and 7,650 families affected.

Damage from the flood also posed a threat to a half million acres of unflooded croplands.

Federal officials told President Ford the threatened farmland may be left without vital irrigation and urged immediate steps to avert "terrible crop losses."

The Jackson, Wyo., Guide reported Tuesday in a copyrighted story that U.S. Geological Survey studies showing geologic faults in the area of the Teton Dam were reported to the Bureau of Reclamation as early as 1973.

Steven Oriol of the survey's geologic division was quoted as saying studies were begun in 1972 — when the dirt and rock Teton Dam was only in the planning stage — to assess the earthquake risk of the entire Rocky Mountain region.

Air pollution alert issued in Fairfield area

HARTFORD (UPI) — The state Department of Environmental Protection today issued an air pollution alert for Fairfield County.

DEP Commissioner Joseph N. Gill called on citizens in the area to avoid unnecessary use of their automobiles and instead travel by public transportation.

Gill said the department will be monitoring smog levels on a 24-hour basis "as long as there is a rising trend."

Grasso host-to-be invites letters from citizens

HARTFORD (UPI) — Paul S. Gadarowski, 33 — the self-styled "common man" whose dinner invitation has been accepted by Gov. Ella T. Grasso — wants state residents with a message for the governor to write him.

"I don't feel that as one person I can portray the feelings of the majority," said the unemployed teacher. "We've got someone (the governor) who's interested sincerely in the welfare of the common man. It's a refreshing note," he said.

Gadarowski said he felt many people had sound ideas which, if sent to him, would "get to the governor, not just some official."

The address of his modest walk-up apartment is 30 James St. No date has been set for the dinner.

Millstone trespasser wants apology

WATERFORD (UPI) — A man who said he barely strayed onto the property of Northeast Utility's Millstone II nuclear plant wants an apology from the firm for the security agent who followed him.

Joseph Trotter, 22, is a nuclear reactor operator with security clearance on the ballistic missile submarine Kamehameha at the Naval Submarine Base in Groton.

He said Tuesday he was hunting for a house May 11 when he made a wrong turn off Rope Ferry Road. "I didn't get the length of my car onto the plant property," he said.

When he saw signs identifying the plant, he said he backed up and turned around, but not before a Northeast security car spotted him.

Trotter said the security agent followed him for several hundred yards on an access road and three miles down Rope Ferry Road, but turned and sped off before Trotter could talk to him.

The investigation was secret until May 20, when he was called from his ship to the Naval Intelligence Office to answer a state policeman's questions, Trotter said.

He said he was disturbed by the nine-day gap, during which he was investigated without his knowledge.

A spokesman for Northeast Utilities said the incident was unfortunate and it would be easy to make a wrong turn onto the access road.

One company executive called the investigation "an overreaction to a man with a black beard driving a foreign car with California license plates."

Trotter said he wrote Northeast, asking for an apology.

Reds' Morgan still improving

NEW YORK (UPI) - Joe Morgan says he has no real goals for 1976 and is just trying to improve on his 1975 performance—and, boy, he sure is doing a good job of it.

The National League's Most Valuable Player in 1975, Morgan is performing at a pace that makes this season the best of his major league career.

Morgan drove in three runs with two homers and a sacrifice fly Tuesday night when the Reds beat the Pittsburgh Pirates, 10-5.

Rookie Santo Alcala went 2-3 in innings and received credit for his sixth win against one loss for the Reds, who dealt Jim Rooker his third loss and six triumphs.

Larry Dierker pitched a five-hit shutout on nine to raise his record to 6-5 for the Astros.

Then a last-inning Boston rally against pitcher Jim Lintz, 5-4, left after four innings, was unable to hold an early 2-0 lead.

ALBANY, N.Y. (UPI) - The State Court of Appeals Tuesday rebuffed a $2.5 million damage suit by football star Joe Namath regarding the unauthorized use of his picture in an advertisement.

Housing project denied nonprofit tax exemption

HARTFORD (UPI) - Capitol Towers, a nonprofit housing project, does not have enough charitable income to qualify for tax-exempt status, according to Superior Court Judge Harold R. Misal.

His ruling Tuesday reversed a decision he handed down while a Connecticut Superior Court judge.

Also involved are other private, nonprofit housing projects, Immanuel House, sponsored by Immanuel Lutheran Church, and Van Block Housing, which operates the Martin Luther King Apartments.

Capitol Towers is sponsored by the Emanuel Lutheran Church. The city of Hartford decided in 1972 to seek the difference between the DCA limit and the projects' total tax bill.

The toll increase, expected to raise an additional $1.3 million, was authorized by the 1976 legislature and signed into law by Gov. Ella T. Grasso.

Johnson says Sox will catch Yanks

BOSTON (UPI) - Chuck Tanner expects his Oakland A's to wind up in first place by the last day of the season and Darrell Johnson predicts his Red Sox will catch the New York Yankees in "six weeks, maybe seven."

"They, then it looks like another Boston-Oakland series," said Tanner Tuesday after his defending American League West champions had beaten the A.L. East champs, 6-5.

Both managers sounded optimistic after the typical Boston-Oakland game. Tanner was pleased with his club's timely hitting and continued strong baserunning.

The Red Sox, winners of three straight over Oakland in the 1975 American League playoffs, will need a little more of everything to start strong baserunning.

Relaxed Chambliss speaking with bat

NEW YORK (UPI) - A relaxed Chris Chambliss, off to the best start of his six-year major league career, says about the New York Yankees, "there isn't anything we can't do."

Chambliss was feeling expansive after hitting a two-run triple and scoring the winning run Tuesday night as the Yankees downed the California Angels, 4-2.

"I have a lot of confidence now," the 27-year-old first baseman said after the game. "This is definitely my best start ever, even better than last year's fast start."

Saying he felt "great," Chambliss said, "If we continue to concentrate, we are going to win. Right now, we go out there with the attitude that we're going to win."

Chambliss, whose .314 average ties him with Thurman Munson for the club lead, tripled to put the Yankees up 2-0 in the first inning. His smash scored Mickey Rivers, on with a double, and Roy White, who reached on a single. One out later, Nettles singled Chambliss home to make it 3-0.

Nettles opened the seventh inning with a solo homer to finish the Yankee scoring.

Dock Ellis, 8-4, pitched a five-hitter to win his first game in nearly a month after four straight losses. He yielded a sacrifice fly to Bill Melton and an RBI groundout to Bruce Bochte.

Left-handed pitchers top draft selections

NEW YORK (UPI) - Major league baseball clubs may have selected left-handed pitchers four of the first five selections in Tuesday's regular phase of the 12th annual summer free agent draft.

The Houston Astros, as expected, made Pat Underwood the first player taken overall. The Astros were the worst club in the National League last year and, under the rules of the draft, it was the National League's turn to pick first this year.

Bannister was the Oakland A's third-round pick and 71st overall in the 1973 regular phase of the draft but chose instead to go on from Kennedy High School in Seattle to college at Northern State University in Tempe, Ariz.

The Detroit Tigers, baseball's worst club in 1975, tabbed Philadelphia Phillies' pitcher Tom Underwood's younger brother, Pat, as the No. 2 pick immediately after Houston chose Bannister.

Pat Underwood, a left-handed pitcher like his brother, is 6-0 and 175 pounds. The 19-year-old Underwood was chosen out of Kokomo High School in Kokomo, Ind.

After the Atlanta Braves made Ken Smith, a high school star third baseman from Youngstown, Ohio, the No. 3 pick, the Milwaukee Brewers and San Diego Padres both picked southpaw pitchers. The Brewers chose Will Borczyk of Rolling Hills, Calif. and the Padres named Robert Overhiko of Eastern Michigan University as their first choice and the fourth and fifth overall-of the draft.

Coleman sold DETROIT (UPI) - The Detroit Tigers sold the contract of pitcher Joe Coleman to the Chicago Cubs Tuesday for a "substantial" but undisclosed amount of money and a player to be named after the end of the major league season.

Bolton road crew problems surface

DONNA HOLLAND
Dissension between members of the town road crew and the road foreman was brought to the public's attention Tuesday after a road crew member refused to talk in executive session at an emergency meeting of the Board of Selectmen.

The meeting held by the board at 8 p.m. is being questioned by several residents.
David Dresely, first selectman, called the meeting. At 8 a.m. Tuesday he notified a member of the road crew of the meeting.
Several residents showed up at the meeting that had not been posted with the town clerk.
Ivli Cannon, chairman of the Democratic Town Committee, repeatedly asked what qualified the meeting an emergency meeting.
Dresely said a personnel problem. Mrs. Cannon questioned whether a personnel problem constituted an emergency.
Dresely said, "In my opinion it qualifies as an emergency. He then asked for a motion to go to executive session. Other two board members, Norman Preuss and Leon Rivers, agreed to go into executive session at a meeting with Dresely several weeks ago.
He said no progress has been made since that meeting.
He said he could not understand why the selectmen called him in yesterday. He was never given a reason.
Dimock said he has the right by state law to request the discussion be held at an open public meeting.
Minutes about the meeting written by Dresely and filed in the selectmen's office today said the selectmen discussed calling in the rest of the road crew to discuss personnel.
The selectmen then called Rattazzi at home and asked him to come to the meeting.
He was informed of Dimock's statements. Rattazzi was instructed to treat the road crew equally in every case and to distribute the work load uniformly.
Another road crew member, Richard Sauer, said Tuesday he would also ask for a public meeting.

selectmen declared an emergency and went into executive session and the manner in which they rudely treated those in attendance."
He said, "I've known for some time there have been problems, ever since the usual hiring of a new road foreman (Donato Rattazzi) whose qualifications were always in question. Obviously the selectmen have let things get completely out of hand."
Mrs. Miner said, "I am thoroughly disgusted with the way the board totally ignored the laws governing public meetings.
"The selectmen knew the situation was brewing for some time. It was no emergency."
Dimock said after the meeting, there have been many problems since the hiring of Donato Rattazzi as road foreman.
In April The Herald reported on the legal but questionable hiring practices of the Board of Selectmen.
Dimock said the four road crew employees thought they were being treated properly in complying with the law.
He said they first talked to Dresely and received no satisfaction. He said they then submitted a list of grievances to the selectmen which resulted in a meeting with Dresely several weeks ago.

Sandberg firing argued in Hartford

Coventry MONICA SHEA

The state Freedom of Information Commission held a hearing yesterday on the complaint of Richard Cromie concerning the actions taken by the Coventry Town Council prior to and including the firing of Allen Sandberg, former town manager. The commission hearing officer Helen Loy was assisted by Henry Cohen, an attorney from the secretary of state office.

Cohen and Mrs. Loy declined to hear items one and two of the complaint filed by Cromie citing previous rulings by the commission on those matters.
Items one and two concerned the majority members of the council meeting in secret and majority members meeting with the town attorney. The commission found this act of meeting permissible.
The commission did take testimony on Cromie's third item concerning the legal notice for the special council meeting at which Sandberg was actually fired.
Cromie entered into evidence the letter by Jesse Brainard, council chairman, advising for the posting of the notice and the actual notice posted.
Brainard explained what took place at the April 21 meeting. He said there were two items voted.
The first vote rejected Sandberg's letter of resignation. Then the council voted to terminate Sandberg.
The notice posted for the meeting read that the meeting was to act on the letter of resignation of the town manager.
When Town Atty. Schwebel questioned Brainard, he said the intent of the meeting was to resolve the issue of the town manager.
"Sandberg could accept our position or reject it. We did not intend to negotiate," Brainard said.

Cromie called Ruth Benoit, assistant town clerk, to explain and verify the notice posted for the meeting.
Cromie objected to not being able to include evidence concerning items one and two and asked that the record show his objections. He also asked that the record show the reluctance of the town attorney and Brainard to answer questions concerning a possible secret meeting.
Schwebel objected but was overruled.
Schwebel called Claire Connolly, the correspondent for the Hartford Times, to the stand because of a letter Mrs. Connolly had sent to the commission concerning the matter.
But the hearing officer refused to accept into evidence Mrs. Connolly's letter or testimony.
In summing up Cromie said, "The question of item number three is very clear. The notice of the special meeting was especially prepared for the resignation and acted upon at the meeting of the council. And at the meeting the council acted on the resignation and then proceeded to fire Sandberg. This was a second action."
Cromie said, "I believe this second action is a complete violation of the Freedom of Information Act. The background presented here shows an open violation of the call for the meeting."
In summation Schwebel said, "This is a very narrow issue. The call was to consider and act upon the town manager's resignation. It seems to me that they considered and acted upon it. This was done in an open meeting. I can't conceive how the public could need more notice. Everyone knew what they were there for."
Mrs. Loy said she would review the case and make a recommendation to the full commission for their vote.

Old Town Hall

The Old Town Hall on the Green was constructed in 1838 and built as the Methodist meeting house. The town purchased the building in 1863 for $600. It has been used as a town hall, courtroom, polling place, ballroom and grange hall. The society is restoring the hall to be used as a museum.

Porter's Mill

Porter's Grist Mill, West Main St., circa 1740, is owned by Mrs. Harold Brink. It was operating in 1740. The original machinery of the mill was removed in 1932 and replaced by a power mill. The late Harold Brink built the present 15-foot wheel which is geared to a modern grinder.

A cattle pound built on the property by the town is one of the few remaining pounds in the state. Persons will enjoy homebased refreshments and a beverage here.

Asten-Beach House

The Asten-Beach House on Burrows Hill Rd., circa 1725, is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Frederick J. Wythe, who purchased it in 1952. Robert Asten came to town in 1725 and lived in a "Mansion House" on this property. In the early 1760's he sold the property to Richard Beach.

It is believed that the wing of the house housed a hat factory at one time. The house has a dividing partition placed in the exact center of the structure giving the front and back rooms equal depth.

Burrows Hill

The Burrows Hill one-room schoolhouse, circa 1725 on Burrows Hill Rd., has been completely restored. It is in constant use until 1911. The school is constructed of wooden clapboards and pegged beams with an arched ceiling, wood burning stove, teacher's desk, student desks and benches and a long state blackboard.

It is registered with the state as an historic landmark.

Three 17-year-old youths were charged Tuesday with third-degree criminal mischief after being apprehended by Vernon Police officers who had the Fox Hill Memorial Tower under surveillance.
Charged were: Craig Morganson of 87 Talcott Ave., Rockville; Richard Gottler, of Main St., Talcottville; and Michael Crami of Lebanon.
The three were allegedly apprehended while damaging the front door of the tower which has been the target of vandalism several other times. The three were released on

Thomas Brody, 20 of 14D Progress Ave., Rockville, turned himself in to the Vernon Police station this morning and was arrested on a Common Pleas Court warrant charging him with first degree robbery and second-degree larceny.
Police said the arrest stemmed from the investigation of a June 2 holdup at the Vernon Glass Station. In lieu of $5,000 bond Brody was to be presented in court in Rockville today.

'Savage' bothers board

South Windsor

Despite some objections over terminology, the Board of Education chose to adopt a new social studies text for the fifth grades titled "Many Americans: One Nation."
Board members John Giordano and William Neal both objected to the word "savage" used in reference to the American Indian as well as "American Negro" used in reference to the nation's blacks.
School Supt. Robert Goldman however pointed out no text is perfect.
"It was the committee's decision and that of the fifth grade teaching staff that this particular text fulfilled most of the requirements than any other," said Goldman.
Pleasant Valley School will have a fulltime remedial teacher funded under der federal Title I and the state. Due to the increased enrollment at Pleasant Valley, the board agreed to hire a part time additional kindergarten teacher.

Original estimates for Pleasant Valley kindergarten enrollment was at 47. Recent enrollment data indicates enrollment for the next year is at 54 kindergarten children.
The school system has agreed, with cooperation from Hayes Bus Co., to conduct a safety evacuation program for school bus children.
Donald Mercure and Arthur Couch of Hayes have laid plans for the safety program to be conducted before the present school year is ended.
A new pilot program where teachers will be trained to assist handicapped children passed by a 7-2 vote. Two board members abstained.

Proposed restaurant rules rejected by town directors

By SOL R. COHEN
Herald Reporter

The Board of Directors Tuesday night unanimously rejected a proposed restaurant-licensing-and-regulating ordinance for Manchester because, as Town Council Victor Moses put it, "this particular ordinance is not right for the town of Manchester - it would create numerous problems in its operation."

Moses, who wasn't consulted about the proposed ordinance until several days ago, strongly recommended its rejection. At the same time, he offered to work with the Advisory Board of Health and the town health department toward the end of drafting a new ordinance, "one that might meet all objections expressed to the rejected one and one that might be right for the Town of Manchester."

By a second unanimous vote, the board authorized Moses to help draft a new ordinance, tailored to the needs of Manchester. The rejected ordinance was a model drawn by the State Department of Health and proposed in Manchester almost exactly as written.

Tuesday night's meeting was in sharp contrast to the public hearing June 1 in a standing-room-only Hearing Room, with the crowd spilling over into the second floor of the Municipal Building.

Tuesday night, the board met in Whiton Library Auditorium, after inspecting defective water pipes in the operation.

Present were eight directors (Paul Willhide is recuperating from an illness), four town officials, three members of the public and three members of the press.

In brief remarks by several directors, it was obvious that their main concern is to make certain whatever ordinance eventually is considered or adopted will not place unfair burdens on the small operators - burdens which might drive them out of business.

In the matter of the defective water pipes in the Community Y, estimated to cost about $7,000 to replace, the board referred it to the Town Building Committee for an inspection and recommendation.

It was the consensus of the board to reject the latest bids (the high was $38,500) for purchasing the old Pine St. Firehouse. The directors will decide whether to hold on to the property, on the theory it may be needed for future improvements to the traffic pattern at Pine St. and Hartford Rd., or whether to put it out to bid again.

By a 8 to 2 vote, with Republicans Vivian Ferguson and Carl Zinsner voting "no," the board tabled any action on a request from the town of South Windsor for bringing its refuse to Manchester's landfill area for a period up to one year. The tabling action was for receiving more information on South Windsor's situation.

Mrs. Ferguson and Zinsner favored immediate rejection of the request.

Director of Public Works Jay Giles told the directors the South Windsor situation has improved and its differences with the State Department of Environmental Protection appear to have been resolved to the point where emergency measures aren't needed anymore.

Bicentennial square dancing

Fifth graders at Waddell School swing their partners in a pioneer scene from a Bicentennial play entitled "Our Country 'Tis of Thee" presented recently at the school. Overhead hangs 12-foot mural designed by Susan Mazzone and made by her classmates in Mrs. Frances Larsson's sixth grade. The mural shows prominent persons in our nation's history with the Liberty Bell in the center, and will be carried in the town's Bicentennial parade on June 12. (Herald photo by Pinto)

Routine items get quick action

It took the Manchester Board of Directors only minutes Tuesday night to approve the following fiscal matters, all unanimously and all without discussion:

A $23,500 appropriation for street lighting in the current fiscal year, to be financed from 1975-76 General Fund surplus. An additional $14,000 for street lighting was transferred from another account. A $2,940 appropriation for Police Traffic Services, for July 1 to Sept. 30, for two traffic squad officers and to be financed under a state grant. The town manager said he anticipates 40 per cent state and 60 per cent town funding for the jobs from Oct. 1, 1976

Deal worked out for Gov. Grasso to attend convention as delegate

HARTFORD (UPI) — The long-expected deal to allow Gov. Ella T. Grasso to be a Democratic National Convention delegate has been arranged.

The needed votes to give Mrs. Grasso delegate status are to come equally from supporters of Jimmy Carter, Morris Udall and an uncommitted state delegate.

Based on that voting in the 6th district, where Mrs. Grasso's home in Windsor Locks is located, Carter and Udall are projected to get three delegates each, while uncommitted would get two.

The disposition of the ninth delegate from that district is unclear because of the complexities of the system, and it is around that spot the wheeling and dealing is being done.

Mrs. Grasso backed Henry Jackson, who didn't get the 15 per cent needed for a national delegate in the 6th Congressional District - in the state's first presidential primary May 11.

But all sides want her to be a delegate, as long as it doesn't cost them any national representation in the process.

Local representatives named during the May 11 primary Saturday pick the 15-member national delegation at six congressional district conventions.

But there lies the problem, because no side trusts the other and giving Carter forces to re-evaluate the deal for fear the complex mathematics of governing delegate allocation will cost them a national delegate.

But he said some of Udall's workers were intent on trying to get a fourth delegate in the sixth

News for senior citizens

Hi neighbor, I guess the first important news to tell you is that the two buses going to Wildwood this coming Monday will leave the senior center at 8:30 a.m. Please have your bags tagged properly, and the name readable and easy to see.

Our float in Saturday's parade will get a real going over starting tonight, and hopefully by Friday night we can have a dry run for all those riding on it. Also, remember the invitation offered to you by the Del Tatto family to see the parade on their lawn or porch. They have two large trees to give nice shade, and because it's a four-hour parade, we suggest you bring along with your folding chairs some goodies and a Thermos full of juice. The address is the corner of Woodland and Main St.

You folks who will be riding the float! We suggest you bring some goodies and juice, and you must be at the float no later than 1 p.m.

The news around the center is that we already filled our buses for the Yankee game and have a waiting list in case anyone changes their mind for one reason or another. More about the game in another column.

The action starts with last Friday afternoon when we had 12 tables for set-back, with these winners: Dora Caron, 138; Joseph Windsor, 129; Ernestine Donnelly, 126; Helen Silver, Olive Houghtaling and Martha LaBate, 124; Albert Oullette, 123; Robert Connor, 120; Sue Kerr, 119; Lyla Steels and Josephine Schultz, 117.

Meanwhile, downstairs we had the following volunteers helping to put parts of the decorations for the float together: John and Sue Schelbengulf, Toni Pousch, Theresa Negro and Anna Demko. Pinochle

On Monday along with signing up for the Yankee Stadium trip we had 88 players for our kitchen social bingo games. In the afternoon we had 14 tables for pinocle and the lucky winners were:

Grace Moore, 702; Nadine Malcom, 695; Andrew Noske, 688; Sam Schors, 678; Rene Maire, 675; Robert Schubert, 672; Olive Houghtaling, 666; Sue Kerr, 664; Mina Reuther, 663; Gladys Seelert and Audrey Durey, 661; Bess Moorman and Betty Jeanina, 656; and Helen Silver, 653.

Expatriate can't afford to live in Britain

PAIGNTON, England (UPI) — Dale Pilon gave up his job as a Massachusetts highway patrolman to become a bobby in this little Devonshire seaside town.

But now, Pilon says, he is giving up his police job to return to the United States "because I and my family simply cannot afford to live in Britain."

When Pilon, 28, came to England last year with his wife, Diane, also 28, and their son, Christopher, 6, he was making around $13,000 a year as a Massachusetts trooper.

As an English policeman his salary is around $5,000 at his take-home pay after tax and social security deductions is $2 a week.

"What I didn't reckon on was the rocketing cost of living here," he said.

Pilon was born in Manchester, England, son of a U.S. airman and a British woman. He went to the United States as a child.

"I fell in love with England when I came over here on holiday," he said, and decided to settle in Britain.

"I love the job, I love the countryside and I think the people are wonderful," he said. "But I want more out of life than simply working to meet the food and heating bills."

"In the states I used to be able to live quite well," he said. "We could go out to the movies or for meals without having to worry about how we were going to pay. We always used to put something in the bank."

"The Pilons had $8,000 in savings when they moved here, but the money has been exhausted."

"We are not going hungry," Mrs. Pilon said, "but almost everything here is twice as expensive as over there."

She said they expect their second child in two weeks and hope to return to the United States in August. Their home at Worcester, Mass.

Pilon said he has been offered his old Massachusetts highway patrol job back, or he may join the state probation service.

Day at high school wears out superannuated student

By ALEX GIRELLI

(Editor's note: One day recently City Editor Alex Girelli left the security of the newspaper to spend the day as a junior at Manchester High School. In this story he tells of his adventures and misadventures and of his reactions to them)

The first thing I did wrong on that day I attended Manchester High School as a junior was to fail to report to the main office before I attended classes.

There was no excuse. I had been told in advance that new students must go to the main office first. My rationalization is that at my age it is difficult to think of myself as a "new" anything.

At any rate, I broke the rules and I paid for it later in embarrassment when a stern voice on the intercom called me out of my seventh period class just as Mr. Zatursky was warning me to the subject of New Deal regulations. It's too bad because I would have shined in that class. The course was history, but as Mr. Zatursky was quick to realize, the New Deal was not exactly history for me. With his prompting I was recalling the pants that were wide all the way down the leg you could put them on without taking your shoes off.

He had mentioned the NRA and the NIRA and my mind raced ahead to WPA and PWA and CCC. I was beginning to hear the Rooseveltian nasal sonority repeat, "Martin, Barton, and Fiat" when I got called out to get called down.

Actually when I reported to Mr. Macado in the Guidance Department he was very understanding.

He lectured me a bit on my oversight and then gave me a guided tour of some shops and classes to show me a contrast to the heavy academic load I was carrying that day in the manner of college-bound high school typical juniors. A Blue Ribbon schedule, he called it.

The courses included Chemistry at level 1, French II at level 1, U.S. History at honors level, Algebra II at level 1, and a course listed on my schedule as "Sr. Eng. - UCONN, at honors level. Tennis and automotive shop rounded it out.

The automotive shop worked out through the courtesy of James Kennedy, superintendent of schools, and the hospitality of George Manning, MIS Regional, at the high school faculty and students.

Leveled courses was one of the strange new experiences. In my high school days, there were college preparatory courses, business courses, and general courses. That was that. While one day's stint as a high school student does not qualify anyone to discuss the educational merit of homogeneous versus heterogeneous class grouping, I'd have to say I like the levels system. I do wonder how certain you can be that a student settles at the right level, and that various teachers consistently maintain the delicate gradations between levels.

I was one student who was decidedly not at the right level in Algebra II. About 35 years ago when I studied algebra for the first, and what I thought was the last time, I was fascinated and fuzzy. This time I was flabbergasted and fogged, or I would have been if I had not watched three sons struggle with the subject. Mrs. Russek lost me after about 90 minutes.

... Leveled courses - new experience seconds. The experience confirmed one of the suspicions that drove me back to school in the first place. The demand on the students is greater than it was in the good old days when we all thought we learned so much. That observation held generally for the day.

Algebra came at the end of the day. If I had had any idea earlier that I could match the young crowd, the last period would have put me in my place.

I rediscovered that school is very tiring. At the close of the school day, when the mind wants to quit, it's no fun to sit and try to comprehend. I would not willingly trade the hectic movement of the newroom for the constraint of the classroom.

I also rediscovered that learning is not an economical process. It's tedious and does not often bring the kind of immediate reward you get from working at a job with a lot of little little goals. It's easy-looking back to see the value of it all; it's much harder trying to see from the front.

This day which ended heavily in philosophical observation, began with tennis. I had always hated gym in first period. This time it was fun.

I found a boy's locker room and an empty locker and changed into the t-shirt (my gym trunks have a wrong high school letters).

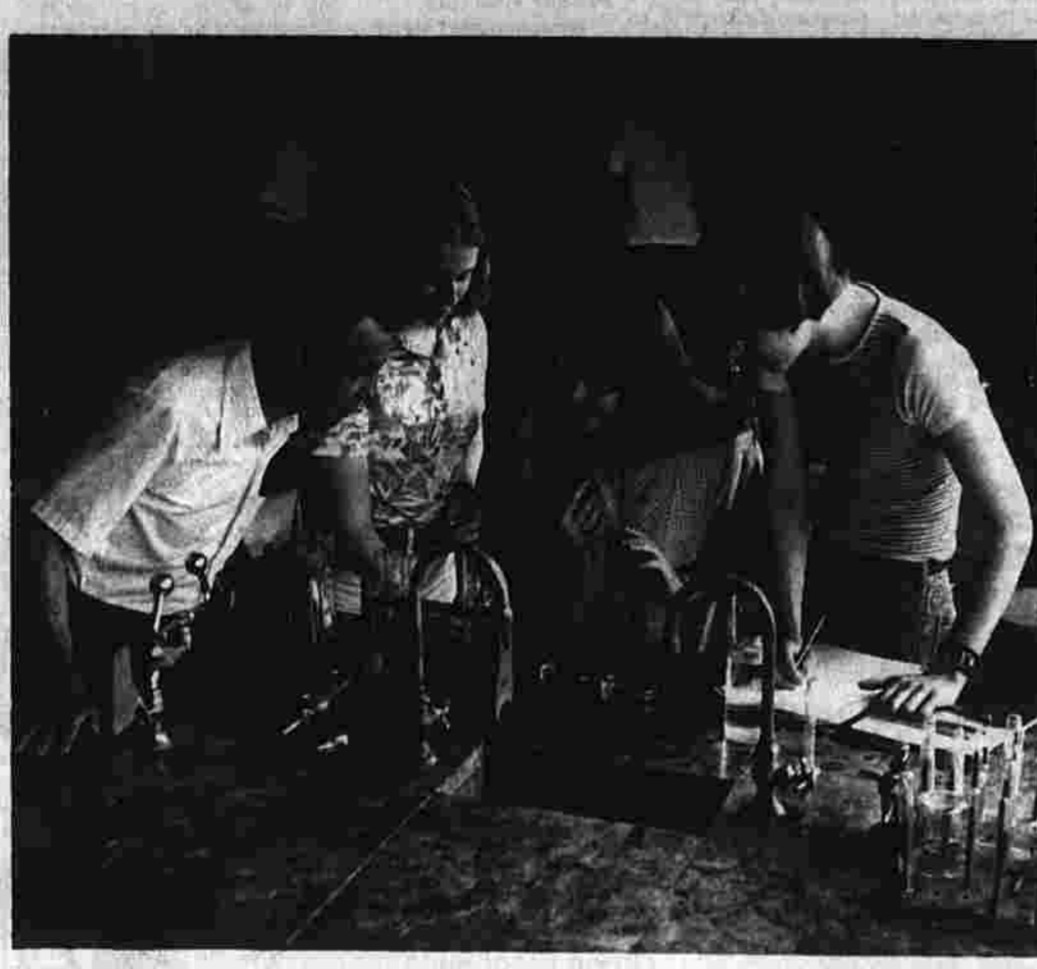

There was no one else in the locker room, which was my first surprise. My recollection of a crowd of noisy boys bumping elbows and trying to accommodate themselves in half the space they needed.

In the gym I found Miss Mally, the teacher to whom I had been assigned. She gave me a tennis racket and apologized for its condition, which was unnecessary because the flabby state of its strings made me feel at home.

I joined three girls on a tennis court and we willed and served quite inadequately. Miss Mally appeared now and then with a word of advice or encouragement or instruction. She taught me a little bit about how to serve, something no one else has ever done, including the high school gym teacher I had those many years ago.

In those macho days of the all-male gym class, a boy was obviously an athlete or he obviously was not. Gentlemen gym teachers treated the later class with tolerance.

I can still remember my old teacher's offhand remark to the effect that I would never be a tennis player. He was wrong and I'll bet and then to make a point that was a bit different. My instruction in elementary French was mostly in English.

and oversimplified a point for emphasis which resulted in a slight inaccuracy. I was puzzled by that and I had the gaucherie to ask about it.

There is often some knucklehead in the class who pines ahead and comes up with a piece of knowledge, valid but irrelevant, which confuses everybody. Why me?

With a twinge of guilt, I remembered what a pest I had been in a college class in 19th century French literature. The administration had scheduled it at 7:30 a.m. Cornellie can be a trial anytime, but at the break of dawn he's impossible.

I did not find the food or the atmosphere in the student cafeteria appetizing.

I did pretty well on the whole. But, of course, I didn't have to pass any tests.

I went to Manchester High School under the assumption that I couldn't make it in a high school today. I was wrong about that. I probably could, but I would have to work at it much harder than I did in my own day.

... Woman dies in home fire

WATERBURY (UPI) - Jacqueline Allegrini died early today as flames swept her home.

Her husband Aneo told officials the couple awoke at about 1:30 a.m. and found their bedroom filled with smoke.

He told fire officials he asked his wife to follow him out of the house, but that when he reached the front yard she was not there.

Allegrini said he attempted to re-enter the house, but was driven away by the flames.

Fire officials said the fire probably started in the kitchen. Mrs. Allegrini's body was found near a mirror in the bedroom.

I know very little about automobiles so there was less chance for a faux pas in auto shop, where I went next. I did ask respectfully about the lack of a gasket where two things were joined together and I learned none was needed.

I was eager to see the sophisticated engine analyzer used for ignition problem diagnosis, but it apparently doesn't work on electronic ignition systems. Mr. Hayes invited me back.

The most unfamiliar class was English.

What you would expect to be a high school English class turned out to be more like a college seminar. That, as a matter of fact, was what it was.

Dr. Kennedy had decided, quite arbitrarily I'm sure, that a newspaperman ought to be a whiz at English. He arranged to have me assigned to a class of seniors in the honors course which is accepted for credit at the University of Connecticut.

As the student came in and formed a circle about Mr. Hunt, I sat myself well to the rear on the periphery. It had become my custom for the day to hide myself as much as possible to let me teacher call on me for an answer.

Two students sauntered through the door, until cigarettes dangling from their lips, and they dropped their bodies casually into chairs. They looked most out of place in that locked class. I pretended not to notice.

I did not realize until Mr. Hunt told me later that the whole charade was for my benefit. The students had cooked up the idea to take me in. They did.

The discussion that day was about words - scatological, fructify, ziggurat, eclectic, zeitgeist, odalisque, ancretic, solipsism, atrogynous, nascent, narcissist, voyeurism.

They do not often appear in newspaper stories, but they do appear in "Stranger in a Strange Land," a novel by Robert A. Heinlein.

Following the example of the hero of the novel, the students were trying to "grok" the words (understand them thoroughly in all their aspects).

It was a good day. A lot of things that were supposed to go wrong didn't. For instance, I didn't get lost - at least not very much. I did not get to classes late.

I did not find pandemonium in the corridors. On other occasions, as a visitor, I had thought the passing of students from class to class was a noisy, unruly business. But on that day, when I had something more important to do than watch, I found the process very efficient.

I did not find the food or the atmosphere in the student cafeteria appetizing.

I did pretty well on the whole. But, of course, I didn't have to pass any tests.

... State election probe secrecy measure signed

HARTFORD (UPI) - Gov. Ella T. Grasso has signed a measure allowing the State Elections Commission to keep secret investigations of possible criminal violations.

She also signed a measure dropping the requirement that candidates who raise and spend less than $500 must file campaign reports, effective immediately.

While investigating possible criminal charges, the Elections Commission is considered a law enforcement agency under terms of the state Freedom of Information Act, allowing the secrecy, effective Oct. 1.

Also signed by the governor was a bill bringing state election law into conformity with a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision.

Concert rejected

NEW BRITAIN (UPI) - Traffic and parking problems, as well as possible noise pollution for the nearby hospital, led the park board to vote 4-3 to refuse permission for folk singer John Sebastian to hold a concert July 18. A 3-1 vote was broken by acting board Chairman Henry Perony, who said an estimated crowd of 10,000 would "create too many problems." Sponsors said it would be a free concert and would probably cause few problems.

Lincoln's Thor of Grimadame Herald photos by Dunn

For the Grimaldis Raising dogs is a family affair

By BETTY RYDER Family Travel Editor When you visit the Grimaldi home on Watrous Rd. in Bolton, don't be surprised if you are greeted with welcome barks from the family's three Great Danes...

The pretty lady of the Great Dane family is Lincoln's Sassy of Grimadame and she has a handsome three-month-old puppy, Lincoln's Macho of Grimadame.

Thor shows off his prize-winning form for John and his dad in the front yard of their home in Bolton.

It's a pure case of puppy love as Teresa gives Macho a hug and Sassy tries to steal a kiss from Geraldine.

Your neighbor's kitchen

When pretty Alice Gaultch came to town she was armed with a little straw basket filled with canned goods. No, she's not Little Red Riding Hood, but the contents of her basket would please the most fastidious wolf.

Chicken makes cooking for one much easier. The sauteurine wine and tender mushrooms in the soup add that special flavor. 1 chicken leg (about 1/2 pound) 1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine 1/2 can (7 1/2 ounce size) Cream of Mushroom with Wine Soup (about 1/2 cup) 1 slice Swiss cheese mashed potatoes In shallow baking dish, arrange chicken skin-side down, pour butter over. Bake at 400 degrees for 15 minutes. Turn chicken; bake 15 minutes more. Stir soup; pour over chicken. Bake 10 minutes more or until done. Top with cheese; bake 5 minutes more or until cheese melts. Serve with potatoes. Makes 1 serving. The super "soup-lasting" was well received, with only one problem that I'm sure most of you won't encounter. As Fortin explained, "I thought the cook would never stop opening all 48 of those cans."

Reading between the lines

In an effort to learn about the town of Philadelphia, Miss. which will be our home for the next two years, my husband and I wrote the Chamber of Commerce; subscribed to the local Indian newspaper the Choctaw News; and scoured the library for interesting bits on Indian and Southern culture.

Scattered through the phone book are pertinent facts about Mississippi. We learned that the mockingbird is the state bird, the magnolia the state flower, and that Nesbota County has two Miss Americas to its credit.

Raising dogs is a family affair

Prudence St. for 12 years. It was burned out last September, he said, and it took several weeks to be repaired. "I learned my trade when I was 11. When I grew older I went to Venezuela where I met Grace, and later we came to the United States.

"Grace keeps busy with the garden in the backyard and we all share the dogs and the kennels. As Grace explains, with a large family, vegetables from the garden are all important. She has a separate kitchen on the lower level facing the backyard where she cans and freezes the garden produce.

Mrotek endorsed

SALISBURY (UPI) — The Salisbury Republican Town Committee has endorsed Atty. Hysard Mrotek's bid for the GOP nomination to oppose Rep. Anthony Moffett, D-Conn.

Mrotek, a New Britain resident, said Monday the endorsement "indicates the growing rapport between my candidacy and Republican voters, and underscores our quest for the merit selection of a nominee capable of winning in November."

David M. Barry

Sen. Barry to speak to grads

Sen. David M. Barry of Manchester, Fourth District, will be the guest speaker Friday at the graduation exercises for Howell Cheney Regional Vocational Technical School. The ceremony will begin at 7 p.m. outdoors behind the school.

Sen. Barry was the district's senator from 1966 to 1971. He was Manchester town counsel from November 1971 to November 1973, a state representative from 1959 to 1961, and on the Manchester Board of Directors from 1962 to 1966. He was deputy mayor from 1964 to 1966.

In 1971, Sen. Barry was counsel to the state senate's Democratic majority, and chairman of Manchester's Charter Revision Commission in 1968.

Dr. John C. Williams, professor of classics at Trinity College in Hartford, will be organist for the procession and recessional.

Masons honor leaders

Cong. Ronald A. Sarasin, Fifth District representative, will be among the guests Saturday, when Connecticut Masons honor their 130th Grand Master Alexander N. Chapman of Stafford Springs, at the Masonic Home and Hospital.

This year's Grand Master's Day, an annual event which draws several thousand visitors from around the state, will include a pageant, "Connecticut Becomes a State in 1776," enacted by residents of the 446-bed geriatric facility.

The day-long program opens at 11 a.m. with guided tours of the home and hospital by district deputies of the Connecticut Grand Lodge, AF & AM.

Congressman Sarasin, who is an original member of the new House Select Committee on Aging, will address the assemblage at 1 p.m.

The entire program is held outdoors under large tents. Luncheon is provided by Mizpah Chapter, OES of Wallingford. Crafts made by residents are offered for sale and an art exhibit by residents and employees also will be on display.

A musical program will be presented by members of the Pyramid Temple brass band. A large number of other dignitaries, including heads of all attendant Masonic bodies, have been invited to attend.

Smoke detectors: A lifesaving investment

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A family of five died in a fire that swept their two-story, $80,000 home in the Virginia suburbs three weeks ago. The cause of death: Smoke inhalation. "It doesn't seem right spending $80,000 on a house but not $50 for safety," said William Bittle, the assistant fire chief in Fairfax, Va.

The $50 would have bought a smoke detector it might have given the family the extra minutes of warning that would have permitted escape. There were 6,800 fire deaths in American homes last year and Richard G. Bright, senior research engineer at the National Bureau of Standards, believes 40 to 50 per cent could have been prevented with the installation of one or more smoke detectors.

The NBS's Center for Fire Research and the National Fire Prevention and Control Administration plan to begin a campaign later this month aimed at getting at least one of the new electronic devices in every home. "We think that a single detector will dramatically increase your safety," said Richard S. Broder, associate administrator of the NFPA. "It has to be installed correctly, and maintained properly."

THE FAMILY LAWYER

As far as the court knows, the testator's will is his "last word."

The consequences of an out-of-date will can be harsh. A widow, estranged from her husband, made a will leaving everything to his son. Soon after, he and the daughter joyfully renewed the bonds of affection. But his will by unspoken in a desk drawer. At his death, beloved daughter got nothing. To some extent, specific events—marriage or divorce, births or deaths—may automatically alter the operation of a will. But most

Out-Of-Date Will

Few people would take an action today on the basis of a decision they made five years ago. Yet, says a survey, more than one-third of all wills are at least that old when they go into effect.

Of Consumer Concern

Most frozen fish imported

About 50 per cent of the shrimp, and 65 to 70 per cent of other frozen seafood sold in the United States is imported. Although some of these imports are already packed in retail units, most fish enters the country in the form of blocks. The development, around 1954, of a method of cutting strips or rectangles from blocks of fillets introduced fried breaded fish sticks (about one by three inches) and portions (rectangles weighing from one and a half to six ounces). These products are cut from blocks, breaded, often partially cooked and then refrozen.

Fillets and whole (round) or dressed (headless, eviscerated) fish are not generally taken from blocks, but are imported in retail-size units and may be packaged in the United States.

When shopping for frozen fish, make sure the product is solidly frozen and has no objectionable odor.

Frozen fish may be glazed (dipped in water once more times and quickly frozen to produce any icy glaze that protects the fish from dehydration). As long as the glaze stays intact and the fish remains frozen, it will keep well. If the glaze has melted or is chipped, the unprotected flesh may turn a cottony white. This condition is called "frozen burn" and even though the fish is still frozen, the exposed flesh has begun to suffer a cellular breakdown and should be rejected.

Avoid damaged packages. Fish is packed in moisture and vapor-proof materials to prevent dehydration and contamination. If the package is damaged, it could mean quality loss. Also, avoid packages stacked above the freezing line in the store freezer. They may be thawed or in the process of thawing.

Check the labels of breaded products. If the label says "regular breading," it contains 50 per cent fish. If the label says "lightly breaded," it must contain at least 65 per cent fish.

Important, too, is that you give the fish product proper handling between the time of its purchase and preparation for cooking.

Chinese emperors for a period of 141 years (1277-1281) acknowledged their dependence upon their subjects by being crowned on a blanket, held aloft by a group of their people.

The court affirmed a lower court ruling which requires that the Devil's Hole spring be kept at a level sufficiently high to assure survival of about 200 pupfish in their only known location on earth. The pupfish feed on algae which grows on a shell in the cavern. When the water level drops below the shell, the fish cannot reach the algae. After ranchers began pumping in 1968, the water level fell each year until the algae supply was threatened. Clearly, Burger said, Devil's Hole was designated a national monument to preserve the pupfish, and thus the ranchers could not be allowed to endanger them.

The unanimous decision this week, written by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, limits the rights of ranchers around Devil's Hole National Monument to pump irrigation water from an underground table which has fed the fish's limestone cavern for 10,000 years.

The entire program is held outdoors under large tents. Luncheon is provided by Mizpah Chapter, OES of Wallingford. Crafts made by residents are offered for sale and an art exhibit by residents and employees also will be on display.

A musical program will be presented by members of the Pyramid Temple brass band. A large number of other dignitaries, including heads of all attendant Masonic bodies, have been invited to attend.

The call to order will be made by Arthur F. Simpson of Milford, president of the Masonic Charity Foundation. The invocation and benediction will be delivered by the Rev. Ebert R. Brewster of Wallingford, hospital chaplain and grand chaplain for the Grand Lodge of Connecticut.

Grand Master Chapman, who conducts his own safety engineering consulting firm, for many years headed the safety division at United Aircraft in East Hartford.
