Viking 2 picture of Mars

Tilted Viking 2 sends pictures of rocky Martian plains

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI) — The first pictures of the Martian plains of Utopia were transmitted back to Earth early today from a tilted Viking 2 lander showing a very rocky surface stretching to the horizon. The photos were delayed for more than nine hours by communications problems.

They indicated the lander was sitting on a 10-degree slope or had put down with a footpad on a large rock, mission control said.

The black and white television images scanned across the dust in front of the lander to prove the Viking robot's cameras were in good working order. An hour earlier, the lander had started beaming back engineering data.

"This is just as much fun as it was the first time," Dr. Tim Mutch, head of the lander imaging team, said.

The second photo, the panorama, showed the meteorology boom jutting out from the lander in the right position, further proof of the robot's health. The pictures, taken shortly after 9 a.m. on Mars with the sun still low in the morning sky, built up slowly across closed-circuit television screens at Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

The Plains of Utopia where the lander put down was believed one of sand dunes and rocks covered with wind-blown dust. The rocks were very evident in the first photos, however, ranging from pebbles to rocks that appeared to be large enough to damage the lander if it had struck them.

"It looks like a forest of rocks out there," Mutch said. The first photo scanned from left to right to show one of the lander's foot-pads positioned on the edge of a scattering of rocks several inches wide. Flat rocks were described as "sedimentary."

Engineers had worked around the clock to restore the communications capability of its orbiting radio relay satellite which went out immediately after the lander separated from the orbiter while high over the planet.

Youth work program plans started

Robert J. Digan, director of youth services, said he expects that the town will extend the Comprehensive Youth Work Experience Program (CYWEP) into the school year.

The federally funded program, which provides part-time employment to economically disadvantaged youths, employed 119 Manchester youths this summer. This would be the first time, however, that CYWEP was organized for a full school year in Manchester.

It was expected to be in the works for the beginning of the last school year, but organizational problems prevented CYWEP from being instituted in local schools until May, Digan said.

The in-school phase would provide ten hours of work per week for 20 students in Manchester schools. The participants must work with non-profit organizations.

Digan said that his department is just waiting for a sponsor to be selected for the program before organization begins. Federal funds are funneled to the participating communities through the local sponsor.

CYWEP headquarters in Hartford said a sponsor will be selected Tuesday. The Capital Region Education Council, which sponsored the tunate matter," Howe said. "To withdraw now would go against all I believe in."

He said he would go back to the party leaders who wanted him to abandon his candidacy and ask once again for their support.

Within minutes after his announcement, Gov. Calvin Rampton and Sen. Frank Moss, senior member of the Utah congressional delegation, called Howe's decision a mistake and reaffirmed previous statements that he was unelectable.

Retired Sen. Wallace F. Bennett, a Republican, called Howe's announcement "the best Labor Day gift the Republicans can get." Rampton said earlier that with Howe on the ticket, his seat is a concession to the GOP.

Rep. Howe to stay in race despite moral conviction

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — Rep. Allan Howe, D-Utah, convicted on sex charges, intends to seek re-election despite repudiation by his own party and public opinion polls showing he has no chance of winning.

Howe, a freshman Democrat convicted of trying to buy sex from two police decoy prostitutes, announced Friday he will stay in the congressional race.

He said he had carefully considered statements by party leaders that he was unelectable, public opinion polls showing he would be overwhelmed in the November election by any opponent the Republicans nominate and a growing field of Democratic write-in candidates.

"I will stand by my record of service and my innocence in this unfor-

GOP leader challenges validity of $34.7 million state surplus

HARTFORD (UPI) — One Republican leader said it was hard to believe administration reports the state ended the last fiscal year with a $34.7 million surplus while another said the money should be used to cut taxes.

House Minority Leader Gerald F. Stevens, R-Milford, said Friday the report by state officials of the surplus strained credibility.

"It's difficult to give any credibility to the $34.7 million figure when we know that we actually spent $44.9 million more than we received in revenue during the 12 months ending June 30, 1976," he said.

Stevens was among the most vocal critics of the governor's budgetary plan which includes extensive use of bookkeeping devices and one-time only revenue sources to balance the budget.

"If we are to regain any credibility in Connecticut's financial affairs, we will have to adopt truth-in-budgeting measures that will insure we spend no more money than we take in ... and we will have to take steps to avoid fiscal gimmicks in the future," he said.

Meanwhile, Senate Minority Leader Lewis B. Rome, R-Bloomfield, said he thought the surplus should be used to reduce taxes.

Rome said state officials had either lacked foresight or not leveled with the citizenry when they predicted a budget deficit originally.

"The finances of the state cannot be run on a day-to-day basis. Unless this administration looks ahead to the budget gap looming next year, the state will be faced with another fiscal crisis and possible tax increases," he said.

Gov. Ella T. Grasso last November predicted the state would end the year with an $80 million deficit and instituted austerity measures aimed at cutting that amount.

But this spring officials said the state might not have a deficit at all, and in recent months the surplus figures have continued to increase.

"This is the last, apparently, in a long line of deficits and surpluses reported by the Grasso (Finance Commissioner Jay) Tepper team as they continue to confuse the public about what has really happened to our state money," Stevens said.

High federal spending scored by campaigners

By LEWIS LORD
United Press International
High government spending is coming under fire from both sides in the race for the White House.

Jimmy Carter, the Democratic presidential nominee, told reporters in Plains, Ga., Friday that many of the social programs he has promised may be delayed, if that's what it takes to balance the budget.

"There will be no new programs implemented under my administration unless we can be sure the cost of those programs is compatible with my goal of having a balanced budget at the end of my term," Carter said.

"If it requires a delay in implementing welfare reform or health care in order to accomplish the goal I set of a balanced budget, then those delays will be there," Carter said.

Sen. Robert Dole, the GOP vice presidential nominee, attacked

Carter for making President Ford's vetoes an issue. Dole told the National Conference of State Legislatures in Kansas City that Carter's "persistence on this point indicates a distressing lack of knowledge or understanding of how our government is constructed."

Dole defended Ford's 53 vetoes as "an effort to restore fiscal responsibility ... and taxpayers' money to taxpayers' pockets." Dole noted that Carter, as governor of Georgia, had vetoed 154 bills.

The White House announced that Ford will make his first major campaign appearance the week beginning Sept. 12 with a speech at his alma mater, the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor.

Carter plans to kick off his campaign one week earlier with Labor Day appearances at Warm Springs, Ga. — site of Franklin D. Roosevelt's "Little White House" — and the Southern 500 stock car race in Darlington, S.C.

Carter noted that the Labor Department reported unemployment in August climbed to 7.9 per cent — the highest this year — despite Ford administration predictions it would drop below 7 per cent by December.

Unemployment under Ford, Carter said, was "the highest since the Hoover Depression." He added that Ford was offering "no strong leadership in actually making proposals that would cut down on inflation and unemployment rates."

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Ford was disappointed with the jobless report but remained "firm in his belief that his policies will sharply reduce unemployment and increase employment in the year ahead."

Drought worsens in Upper Midwest

By United Press International
Drought has tightened its grip on the upper Midwest and the far West, sparking forest fires in several states and stunting farmer's crops.

Firefighters planned today to set fire to 35,000 acres of forest land in Michigan's Upper Peninsula in an all-out effort to control a month-old fire that already has devastated 41,000 acres.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said the blaze — the worst in Michigan in 65 years — could blacken 76,000 acres before it is finally brought under control.

A rapidly spreading fire fanned by gusty winds burned out of control Friday over 2,000 acres of forest and brush in and near the Nebraska National Forest in northwestern Nebraska. Firefighters also struggled to master stubborn forest fires in northern Minnesota.

In the Far West, California state foresters said a prolonged drought has turned the state into a virtual tinderbox.

The forest fire potential was high in Colorado, Wyoming and Wisconsin and the National Weather Service warned Labor Day holiday vacationers to use extreme caution while camping in the woods.

A survey of the drought situation in the Midwest Friday showed:

— The drought was worsening in South Dakota, particularly in the northeastern part of the state where rainfall was 12 inches below normal. Crop and livestock losses were estimated at more than $1 billion.

— Minnesota Agriculture Commissioner Jon Wetald predicted the state's farmers would bank only about half as much this year as they would have with normal weather. Southwestern Minnesota was hardest hit with rainfall 6 to 7 inches below normal.

— Wisconsin Gov. Patrick J. Lucey has asked disaster aid for 46 counties. Statewide, farmers are estimated to have lost more than a half billion dollars.

— August was the driest month in 104 years in Iowa and the National Corn Growers Association said hopes for a record national corn harvest appeared to have been shattered.

Plane crash in Azores kills 68

LISBON, Portugal (UPI) — A Venezuelan C130 military transport plane crashed at Lajes Airport on the Azores Island of Terceira Friday night. The national news agency ANOP today reported all 68 persons aboard were killed.

The news agency said the cause of the crash was not known. It said there were no survivors among the 60 passengers and eight crew members of the plane.

The plane was carrying 60 members of the orchestra of the Universidad Central de Venezuela to a concert in Barcelona, the Venezuelan embassy in Lisbon said.

Manchester week in review

Hours for schools shifted

Kennedy, reporting to the Board of Education on plans for opening schools Wednesday also said there would be no need to increase school cafeteria prices for students this year.

Opinion

The Nixon groupie who never says die

WASHINGTON — When Rabbi Baruch Korff began his curious defense of Richard Nixon in 1973, one was reminded of Woodrow Wilson's advice regarding the proper response to zealots: the wise thing to do is to encourage them to hire a hall and talk to the people, for "nothing chills romance like exposure to air."

Three years later the rabbi's campaign has indeed become frozen irrelevance, tiresome in its repetition and noteworthy only for its value as a semi-arrogant remnant of what so soon seems an impossible past. Yet his campaign continues. It is an effort now beyond the public sympathy, now permanently relegated to the fringes of decorum — yet it goes on. In a way, the rabbi's endless promotion of the former President has given a bad name to compassion.

Korff surfaced again at the Republican National Convention. He was there to advise anyone who listened that Richard Nixon was "the greatest president of the 20th century." He admonished the Republicans for omitting the name Nixon from all but private conversation. He said they would be sorry. A judgment day is coming. "I believe the American people will forgive the sins of Watergate," he intones solemnly, "were the Democratic hierarchy."

Nobody is listening now, of course. But it is not hard to recall when they were. In the last months of 1973 and throughout 1974 the rabbi was something of a folk hero patriot. Richard Nixon could not get the Republican committee to work on his behalf, and even the White House was unable to muster visible public appreciation. Then came Korff, a Ukrainian Jew with a proclivity for fighting lost causes. Embracing Nixon, he became an instant celebrity, and he loved it — every interview, every appearance, every glint of the Kluge lights.

Nixon loved it also, of course. Korff held gala gatherings of support for the Watergate Jerry Ford showed up at one to say he believed "Richard Nixon's place in history already stands secure." Cabinet members and military generals packed affairs Korff sponsored. Millions and media hatters were there. And everyone urged the President of the United States to fight the laws and statutes he was sworn to uphold.

Tom Tiede

Nixon did not attend the affair. But on one occasion he called in phone to address the adulators. Korff treated the moment with supreme reverence. Had anyone present succeeded they'd have been sent to the rack, Nixon said he would not quit, and that "we are going to continue until we win." Then a band began playing, and the cheers of the audience followed. At length, after the tumult had ended, Korff put his mouth against the phone receiver and said: "We love you dearly."

Korff's love has since become a crushing thing. One suspects even Nixon has tired of it. It cannot do the former President's shredded image any good to have somebody going about reminding the world of the days of shame. Many of Nixon's old friends agree. They view Korff as an opportunist, stuffy as hell, and as much concerned with his own reputation as that of the 37th president.

And yet, even if he wanted, Nixon could not afford to brush the rabbi

Labor Day, a beginning

If we had a sensible calendar, we would mark the beginning of each new year from Labor Day, not in the deep, dark depths of winter.

For one thing, Labor Day has come to signify the unofficial end of summer and of summer's lassitude — though, one hopes, many more weeks of fine weather remain to be enjoyed. For most of us, vacations are over and ahead lies a long stretch until the next national holiday. Labor Day has also traditionally meant the end of school vacation. It's back to the books for the kids, and some have gone back already. For them and their teachers, it is a new school year, a new beginning.

This year, too, we face the long-stretch of the presidential election contest, so strenuous and wearisome to candidates and public alike but so all-important. The campaigns will now begin to move into high gear.

In short, there's a definite feeling that things get going again after Labor Day, for us as individuals and for the nation itself.

Thus we savor and appreciate this holiday as a pause that refreshes, a day of relaxation for mind as well as body, before we plunge back into the workaday world. Politics and politicians, the cost of living, the international situation — we'll worry about them again tomorrow. Heavy thinking is the last thing we want to indulge in today.

Americans put too much faith in words alone

WASHINGTON — We Americans have almost a blind faith in words. The words of a politician running for office. The words of a treaty. The words of a used car or real estate salesman offering us a bargain.

We are sometimes right. There are candidates who keep their word. And countries which keep treaties. There are more honest salesmen than slysters. The problem is, our faith in words is often so great, we do not distinguish between the honest politician and the dishonest, the country which keeps its promises and the nation which doesn't and the salesman with squinty morals and the ones who backs up his word with service.

Now treaties which are honestly entered into and meticulously honored by both sides can prevent shooting wars and economic wars, insure the protection of American citizens abroad and promote human rights. But such values come only when the other signatories have the same understanding of words that we have

Ray Cromley

And in the pact negotiated with Pyongyang when we reached a "truce" with the North Koreans at Panmunjom. And in the human rights agreements which have been so popular in recent years, but which seem to apply with meticulous rigidity even to minor infringements in the West and not at all to horrendous disregard for human rights in the Soviet Union and other totalitarian countries.

This is not to contend we should end our attempts at detente or make no more treaties with anyone. It does seem to me that we should look at more than the words on any proposal and what they mean to us. What do they mean to the other countries signing, what is their reputation for living up to their obligations in spirit as well as in law? What do we have if we find serious violations? Can we even prove violations effectively if we are dealing with closed societies?

Twins taken in dispute

South Windsor

South Windsor police this morning reported they are still investigating reports of the kidnapping of three-year-old twins Friday afternoon from the Mercer Nursery School and Child Care Center on Pierce Rd.

The twins are Colyn and Robyn Brown, both boys, and the children of Jane D. Brown, 25, of Rockville and Kenneth Brown, 31, of Somerville, N.J. The parents were divorced in August 1975.

Custody of the couple's three children had been given the father. The mother disappeared with the three children including a third son, Ian Brown now age 5. She recently was found to be living in Rockville.

Mrs. Brown was arrested this week in Vernon as a fugitive from justice based on her indictment by a Somerset County, N.J. grand jury on kidnapping charges in March.

At a hearing in Common Pleas Court 19 in Rockville this week, an agreement between the parents and the court was reached. Two of the children would remain with the mother while a third would be taken by the father pending a full hearing next Thursday. Both parents posted $500 bonds to assure their appearance.

Friday afternoon, a man driving a yellow Pinto drove up to the South Windsor day care center while the two twins were napping there, it was learned. He took the children and left. The car's plates were covered with paper.

Area police report

South Windsor

During the incident, two shots were fired, police said.

Lisbon is charged with carrying a pistol without a permit, threatening, reckless endangerment, and first-degree unlawful restraint.

He is being held on $15,000 surety bond for appearance Monday in Common Pleas Court 12 in East Hartford.

High Potency Vitamin E Sexual Potency Quickly Improves With New 'E-Pill'

NEW YORK, N.Y. (Special)—An amazing new "super-charged" vitamin E-Pill has recently been developed that reportedly "quickly increases and rejuvenates sexual drives and potency for both men and women of all ages. It also makes them feel healthier and more youthful." It is now available to the American public.

The new high potency E-Pill not only seems to increase sexual ability of both sexes but also "actually perks up sexual interest and stimulates a person's desires," according to a spokesman for the manufacturer.

ALSO IMPROVES GENERAL HEALTH This new, easy-to-take E-Pill contains newly formulated, highly concentrated vitamin E. It tends to quickly build up and strengthen the natural physiological processes of the body that are believed to be basically responsible for its potency, youthfulness, health and long life.

HELPS 4 OUT OF 5 PEOPLE Indications are that the new E-Pill gives quick and effective results to as high as 4 out of 5 people (80%) who have used it. Some people report no great change but feel the high potency of vitamin E in the pill does quickly make them feel better from a general health standpoint. Other reports also show it tends to "loosen daily tension and give a more relaxed, happier outlook on life."

NOW AVAILABLE The use of these high potency (one-a-day) E-Pills is perfectly safe and are now available without prescription from the manufacturer by mail order only. To get your supply, send $6.95 for a 2 week supply, (or $10.95 for a 30 day supply, or $17.95 for a 60 day supply) cash, check or M.O. to: E-Pill, Dept. 516, 447 Merrick Road, Oceanside, N.Y. 11572. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not satisfied.)

Thief picked wrong camper

RENO, Nev. (UPI) — Mrs. James Getty knew the man in the driver's seat of their camper wasn't her husband. He was sleeping beside her.

Mrs. Getty screamed. Her husband jumped up, peered through a window into the cab and found a stranger looking back.

The thief, who had apparently not checked the sleeping section, slammed on the brakes, jumped to the pavement and ran off.

Mrs. Getty said she was awakened by the vehicle's motion and at first thought her husband had gotten up for an early start.

CB for more than just four-wheelers

(Editor's Note: Ink Dipper (KYZ-3916) is the handle of the editor of The CB Times-Journal).

If you're one of those millions who have finally made the more toward having a CB in your four-wheeler, then maybe it's time you hooked a unit up in other areas of your life.

For instance, more and more fishermen are finding that it's much easier to find "where the fish are" with a CB at their side.

For practical purposes you won't be scaring fish away by screaming to a nearby boat to see how the catch is going.

It will also have time from fishing in the wrong place till the sun goes down, and turning in with a dry haul.

And don't minimize the fact that there could be a dire emergency aboard your boat and the only way you could get attention is by setting your boat afire or using CB.

Yes, you'll be able to scream for help from your good buddies, but don't expect to hear from the Coast Guard, if you're in their area.

The only way a CBER can get Coast Guard help is if he also has an FM frequency radio on board or locates one in another boat.

The U.S. Coast Guard refuses to monitor CB because of the many hoaxes they claim have been perpetrated via CB.

So the Coast Guard may not listen to you, but the fish probably will. Fishermen aren't the only outdoorsmen who find the air waves a help. Have you thought of backpacking with a CB for company?

A hand-held CB transceiver is a self-contained CB radio. You can take it anywhere on a back-packing expedition, from New York's Central Park to the Smokey Mountains.

A walkie-talkie can be bought for as little as $15.95 and up to $149.95. And if you're a member of a family in which everyone likes to route his own course on family outings then stick them all with a CB. It works much better than saying, "Met you back here at 8:15 p.m." This way you can find out where they are and if they need help.

How about a CB on your two-wheeler (or motorcycle)? It may sound strange, but it can be a life-saver for motorcyclists, just as well as automobile drivers.

Duncan Parks, a 68-year-old man from Watkins Glen, N.Y., made a cross-country trek from his home to California and back. His company for the trip? A motorcycle and his sweet-talking CB, of course.

Parks felt prepared for anything after he put his CB in an old camera case and wore it around his neck with a transistor radio earphone which plugged into his helmet.

"I was going alone," Parks said, "and realizing the vastness of this great country and the possibility of a breakdown. But I got my CB."

Even though you might not be planning to go boating, back-packing or motorcycling right away, you could be just planning to bicycle around the block, and need to be in contact with home.

There's a CB for every occasion and there's no limit to its use for leisure or in an emergency, all it takes is a desire to communicate and a little imagination.

CB Convac appears each Saturday
