Gossip columnists gossip about jobs

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Gossip columnist Rex Reed says he only gives the public the gossip it wants. "They really want it nasty, and so do the editors," he says. Reporter Sally Quinn says it isn't her job to protect the person she's interviewing from his own indiscretions. 'My responsibility, I think, is solely to my readers and telling the readers what this person is really like," she says, "And that is what my mission is. If I don't tell the reader what the person is really like, I have failed." Magazine editor Nora Ephron says celebrities, by and large, seek celebrity status. "Nobody points a gun to your head and says, "Do the Merv Griffin Show," she says. Reed, Miss Quinn of the Washington Post and Miss Ephron of Esquire magazine chatted Wednesday about why gossip has become important in newspapers and magazines.

They appeared at a National Town Meeting session in the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. They said professional gossips should not be blamed for what they monger. The public gets what the public

Only Miss Ephron deplored gossip. She said newspapers run it because "it's a lot cheaper for a newspaper editor to pay $5 a week to run a syndicated gossip column than it is to put two or three reporters on an investigative story that may not pay off at all." Reed said gossip is popular because "it makes these people feel happy, secure and somehow perversely selfsatisfied to know that somewhere Elizabeth Taylor is panelists exhibited the gossiping instinct when Miss Ephron remarked she didn't think the book, "My Story" by Judith Exner, was gossip. "No, that qualifies as history," miss Quinn agreed. Badly written history, to be sure...

'Rather dubious history,' Reed said. Miss Quinn, responding to questions from the audience, defended her coverage of Queen Elizabeth's Jubilee. Her London dispatches were criticized in a string of letters in the Washington Post.

"I think her clothes were hideous," she said of the queen.

Everyone at the ceremony talked of nothing else, she said. Duchesses nudged each other. Asked why the Post had decided to "lower its dignity" and start carrying "a look-down-the-nose" gossip column, Miss Quinn said that issue had divided the newsroom as well as readers. Some people had been saying, "We don't read the Post anymore because it's too boring," she said. On the other hand, ever since Watergate, some readers have felt that the Post should become a stuffy, establishment paper. "Everybody on the paper feels violently about it, one way or the other," she said. "I don't know the answer."

Hijacker to undergo psychiatric tests

NEW YORK (UPI) - Luis Robinson, the Navy man charged with killing two persons in a bus hijacking Monday at Kennedy Airport, will undergo a series of psy-chiatric tests near the jail where he is being held. Officials said the court-ordered examinations were to be held today at a psychiatric clinic in the Queens Criminal Court complex.

Dr. Daniel Schwartz, director of the Forensic Psychiatric Services at KCH, will administer standard psychiatric tests to determine Robinson's mental condition "at this time," a KCH spokesman said. Robinson, a 26-year-old native of Panama and registered alien, was ordered to undergo the tests at a brief hearing Tuesday before Queens Criminal Court Robinson's attorney, David Addison, said his client had seen a psychiatrist in 1973 for a "minor problem."

"This gift provides a solid kickoff to our campaign. We expect that it will be followed by contributions from broadcast companies. "The money will be used to help head off a worldwide trend toward increased government control of news media personnel in facilities, especially in developing Third World nations. "In contrast with the use of government funds to control the press in many countries, this effort to promote press freedom will be financed entirely by private contributions, mostly from news-gathering organizations."

"I can tell your better in five more months if I'm the best tennis player in the world," he told the media after he made his initial appearance in Hartford.

There are many supporters of the longhaired Swede who feel he's No. 1 following his five-set win over Jimmy Connors last Saturday in England.

On the other hand, Connors has his army of followers for the No. 1 ranking among the pros. Borg, in his first year in WTT play, was simply brilliant in his singles performance against Roy Emerson,

> Borg No. 2 but the margin is wafer thin and that rankings were made before Wimbledon. "My goal now is to win at Forest Hills," Borg said. Earlier this year, Borg beat Connors in the finals of the Grand Slam

Currently, Connors is ranked No. 1,

The 5-11, 162-pound Borg, happy with his fiancee as a member of the Nets as well, Mariana Simionescu, feels that experience, plus a reduced playing schedule has greatly improved his game.

"I used to play 11 months of the year. Now I have cut that down to eight and one-half to nine months, On what Borg showed Wednesday night, Connors' superiority will be seriously challenged. The standing ovation Borg received when introduced was heartwarming. "I can never recall being greeted like that," he said, "I really felt good and hoped that I played that way."

He did.
