Two confer at hearing

June Goodwin of Danbury, the vice chairman of the State Board of Education, nursing an injured leg, talks with Commissioner of Education Mark Shedd as he waits to testify before the Connecticut Legislature Program Review and Investigations Committee Tuesday. Education is one of three state agencies charged with not complying with state non-discrimination laws. (UPI photo)

Racial imbalance remedies discussed

HARTFORD (UPI) — The state Education Department expects to propose regulations this year designed to ease racial imbalance in Connecticut schools. But Education Commissioner Mark Shedd Tuesday dodged the issue of what the regulations would say, emphasizing that he wanted local schools given as much leeway as possible to correct any problems. The regulations are required by a 1968 law, but have never been approved by the legislature's Regulations

Review committee. Proposed regulations were previously rejected because they were too stringent. Shedd told the legislature's Program Review and Investigations Committee his department hoped to have a new set of regulations ready to present to the state Board of Education by October. He appeared before the committee along with representatives of the Labor and Transportation Departments to defend the agencies against charges they were discriminating against minorities. In skirting the issue of what the regulations would actually say, Shedd went out of his way to emphasize his intention was not to impose solutions to the problem on local officials. "It's not in our minds that the state should impose any plan on a local community, much less any plan on all of them. The basic responsibility rests with local school boards," he said. Asked if the regulations might include a busing plan he said, "I can't believe the state board (of education) would impose a busing plan on all the districts in the state." But he declined to say if he thought the regulations might lead to busing in a particular district and appeared uncomfortable even discussing the subject. He said he hoped the regulations would deal more with improving the quality of education than with transporting children. At the committee hearing Rep. Boyd Hinds, D-Hartford, said laws already on the books banning discrimination were not being enforced by the Education, Labor and Transportation Departments. "We have enough laws on the books. Connecting looks good on paper, but they haven't been enforced," he said. The Program Review Committee is finishing up a three-month investigation into the discrimination charges and is expected to issue a report later this summer.

McDonald decal-glasses pass FDA health hazard tests

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Food and Drug Administration tests have turned up no evidence of a health hazard from lead in carbon-character glasses distributed at McDonald's fast food restaurants. The agency said Tuesday that even though red, white and yellow decals on the glasses' exteriors contain lead, there is "no evidence the lead can contaminate the liquid inside."

FDA said lead in the painted decals could be leaked out when exposed for extended periods to various chemicals. But it poses no health hazard with normal use.

The FDA said it will work with the Environmental Protection Agency and the Consumer Product Safety Commission "to answer any further regulatory or public health questions still unanswered in this matter."

Massachusetts health officials last week ordered McDonald's and Owens Illinois, Inc., which manufactures the glasses, to stop its "Glasses To Go" advertising campaign and the state health commissioner advised parents to keep children away from the 49-cent glasses.

McDonald's and Owens Illinois, Inc., which manufactures the glasses, have charged Massachusetts acted irresponsibly, and threaten to sue the state.

Caldor sales rise

Caldor, Inc., today reported a 33.3 percent sales increase for the five weeks and a 36.4 percent gain for the 22 weeks ended July 2, 1977.

Val Fossetti, Caldor treasurer, said sales for June continued to move sharply ahead to $37,610,000 from $28,225,000 for the same period last year. For the 22 weeks sales increased to $139,650,000 compared to last year's $102,400,000. He went on to say that the increase can be attributed to increased consumer demand, favorable weather conditions, as well as the contributions from the new stores. Ten new units have been opened since June of last year.

The company plans to open two more stores in time for the back-to-school season, one in Enfield, and the other in Springfield, Mass.

Shortcut unnecessary

The Manchester residents in the Helaine Rd. area who complain that the town went forward with a change that would affect their water supply without consulting them in advance are right.

It would have been better to tell them in advance what was coming and why, what the alternatives were, if any, what the disadvantages and advantages are, and so forth.

The plan to abandon the Helaine Rd. pumping station may be a very good one. It probably is very sound from the viewpoint of engineering and economics. In the long run it will probably be done. It's likely that ultimately almost everyone involved will be satisfied.

Tax break, energy leak

For years Americans have been permitted to claim state and local gasoline taxes—averaging about seven cents a gallon—as a deduction on their federal income tax returns.

Now the White House and Means Committee, which has a great deal of clout in such matters, has voted to abolish the gasoline tax deduction—and it's hard to quarrel with the committee's point of view.

Why give a tax break for consuming gasoline at a time when the government is trying to save fuel and reduce oil imports from the Middle East?

For the 18.5 million taxpayers who itemize their deductions, this could increase taxable income by an average of $37 or $38 a year, beginning with returns filed in 1979.

But the extra $700 million flowing into the federal treasury should help—in a small way—to offset the whopping deficits we've been running up in recent years.

And the typical driver might have one more reason to keep his car in the garage when walking, bicycling or riding the bus would serve him just as well.

Panama Canal treaty trouble

By Martha Angle and Robert Walters
WASHINGTON (NEA)—The fate of a new Panama Canal treaty may depend upon President Carter's ability to persuade the Senate to tackle the politically ticklish pact before it adjourns for the year this fall.

Top administration officials are increasingly fearful that attempted ratification of the treaty may have to be postponed until January or February if Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd continues to insist upon adjourning the Senate by Oct. 8.

And that, from the viewpoint of treaty advocates, spells nothing but trouble.

Explosive issue
Carter and his foreign policy advisers have recognized all along that the Panama Canal is an explosive domestic political issue.

No matter how carefully qualified, any new treaty ceding U.S. control of the canal to Panama will face extremely rough going on Capitol Hill. To entrust such a pact to the tender mercies of Congress in an election year is an invitation to disaster.

Another month or so may be needed to nail down the fine print details. Congress will be in recess the entire month of August, which means it will be after Labor Day before a completed treaty could even be submitted to the Senate.

That would leave just five weeks for Senate consideration of the most controversial foreign treaty in years if Byrd sticks to his Oct. 8 adjournment target.

And during that time, the Senate will be debating and voting on Carter's energy program.

Little interest
Thus far, Byrd has displayed little interest in taking up the Panama Canal treaty this year. "The Senate is not ready for the treaty even if the treaty is ready for the Senate," he reportedly has told associates.

State Department lobbyists concede they do not yet have enough votes in the Senate to ratify a new canal treaty. "If we had to take a vote today, could we couldn't get more than about 50 votes for it," one nose-counter said.

But treaty negotiators Ellsworth Bunker and Sol Linowitz, along with Gen. George Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Bernard W. Rogers have been patiently briefing small groups of senators on the contents and importance of the new treaty.

Briefings effective
So far, the administration team has met with more than half the members of the Senate, and Capitol Hill sources say the briefings have been extremely effective. Gen.

Brown's wholehearted support for the new treaty has been especially helpful, these sources said, since many congressional and public fears about the pact center on defense issues.

Nonetheless, said a Senate Foreign Relations Committee source, "the time pressures are just becoming excruciating at this point."

Carter and his strategists are preparing a concentrated campaign to drum up public support for a new Panama Canal treaty once the diplomatic negotiations have been concluded. They know it will be difficult to persuade members of Congress to vote for the pact as long as their constituents remain so emotionally opposed to it.

True test to come
But the true test of Carter's commitment to a treaty may lie in his willingness to lean on Byrd for speedy Senate action, even if that means annoying the powerful majority leader.

There is absolutely no compelling reason why the Senate must adjourn by Oct. 8, apart from Byrd's determination to keep to the timetable he outlined early this year.

If the president really considers a Panama Canal treaty vital to U.S. interests, he has best be prepared to fight for it now instead of risking an election year brawl over the proposed pact.

An owl's editor's notebook

By FLOYD LARSON

Now there must be at least a dozen or so books on "How to Survive Winter," but there are apparently few, if any, dealing with surviving summer.

We all naturally assume that summer is, like the song says, a time "when the livin' is easy."

And that may have been true at one time before America became a nation on wheels.

In order to fit this void in defensive living, we would like to pass on some tips on how to survive some of summer's most dangerous threats.

Children—What to do to entertain them if you keep them home; or, how to farm them out to relatives for the summer.

First, forget about entertaining them if they stay home for they will come around the house on occasion at mealtime, but never will forage too far away from the refrigerator.

In other words, they will be at home but you really won't know it—except for frequent financial needs.

As a rule communication has to be written rather than oral and the only place to leave notes with any assurance they will be read is within six inches of the refrigerator latch.

The ideal way—financially and educationally—is to send kids to McDonald's—the farm not the restaurant. Maybe, just maybe, if the boys in the household could learn how hard it is to produce the groceries, they might at least chew it twice before swallowing.

Unless you have farmers who are relatives and who think of you as a rich uncle, you might have trouble finding a farm for the kids without spending a small fortune.

It used to be that farmers loved to have city kids come and spend the summer with them. Nowadays farm kids are just as city as city kids and the fun isn't in it anymore. So pick a farm camp and send them there. It won't be the same as when you were young, but then nothing else is either.

Next we have the unexpected variety of visitors, who appear ready to make your home the base for six weeks to one-day sorties all over the region.

The only way to survive is to practically drive them away with kindness. Especially be certain to take over itinerary planning so that you can crowd in 14 hours of activities into 8 or 9 so that by the end of the third day of their stay, they will be exhausted and want to go home.

The expected visitors present another problem—after all, you probably invited them in a weak moment. The only way to encourage their early departure is all but ignore them. By pleading work, little league coaching chores, etc., they soon will tire of sitting around your house with its "broken" air conditioner and be on their way.

The third major threat to survival in summer are friends and relatives who do not want to babysit your children or pets for an extended period, do not want you to operate tours out of their homes and who invited you to visit but act like they didn't.

The only way to cope with these types of people is to write that you are coming—then don't.

Of course this does not apply to old wartime buddies, school classmates, your in-laws and any relative who may have something worth willing.

Which leads us to the fundamental problem of summer which is how to finance it—whether you stay home or roam the globe.

Two may be able to live as cheaply as one—but not when traveling or entertaining guests.

Summer rates are inevitably higher unless you visit a Mohave Desert ski resort.

And if you think keeping the kids in school is expensive, how about the costs of keeping them when they're out of school?

The answer is the Two Credit Card Combo play. Simply stated, you use one credit card to spread the cost of summer over the whole year and another to spread the cost of Christmas over the whole year.

With two major creditors looking after you, you will survive. And that my friends, in a peanut shell, is how to survive summer.

Compart special: A man and a woman, accompanied by their six children, went to see a marriage counselor. She said, "The children are the only thing that has kept our marriage together. He won't take them and I won't either."

tion means chemotherapy or surgery. As a doctor friend put it, "People should be protected against neglecting themselves."

Right to neglect
Now that doctor is a kindly and humane man. But I reject his point out of hand. Nobody has a right to infringe on the right of anybody else to neglect himself. There is still in this country, or there should be, something called freedom of choice.

If Doc Eggar told me I had terminal cancer, I would decide unilaterally what I wanted to do about it. Perhaps I'd prefer to live it up instead of spending my last months on earth in the hospital or under a cobalt machine.

Perhaps I'd give Laetrile a try.

Even doctors admit that taking a medically unproven substance could be a psychologically beneficial effect on some patients. That is to say, they believe the stuff is helping them and so they feel better. After all, a good psychologist can often straighten out a mixed-up patient.

Anyway, until someone proves Laetrile is harmful, Big Brother should keep his hands off a people's license to experiment with it. As Pa put it about Aunt Lil: She had a mustache, and he used to pay us kids a nickel to kiss her. Aunt Lil never drank water, claimed it would rust her joints. We used to tease her about it, but Pa told us to let her be. "It's a free country," he said.

So he came to Hartford, found financial backing and plant space, and formed Pratt & Whitney Aircraft. Before the year was out, the first engine was built and on test. It was called the Wasp. The orders it brought quickly established the fledgling company. Rentschler then set about investing money to bring forth better engines in the years ahead.

The validity of his strategy was borne out over the years by the increasingly more advanced engines—first piston and then jet—that have come from Pratt & Whitney Aircraft. All grew out of R&D.

Take the engine known as the JTRD, which powers such jetliners as the Boeing 727 and 737 and McDonnell Douglas DC-9. It was developed in the early 1960s with company funds, and it's been in heavy production ever since to become the most widely used jet engine in airline annals.

We've built more than 8,000 so far in our Connecticut plants. Orders continue to come in from around the world. Production of JTRD engines and parts is expected to provide work for our people and plants for years to come.

Seventeen years after the JTRD's design was begun, we're still putting development money into the engine to make it better, quieter, cleaner, more powerful, more fuel-efficient.

United Technologies is involved in a host of high-technology spheres besides flight propulsion, and we're investing R&D dollars in all of them.

Our R&D investment for the last five years totaled nearly $1.5 billion. Last year it was a record $358 million, or nearly $1 million a day. It's projected at some $2 billion over the next five years.

Research lies at the heart of almost all that we do. It yields new techniques, new products, improvements to existing products. And these lead to enhanced competitiveness, expanded markets, and greater job opportunities.

We look at research the same way Frederick Rentschler did: It isn't only a cost of doing business today; it's the guarantee of staying in business tomorrow.

Legislative leaders gathered in the office of Gov. Ella Grasso for the signing Tuesday of legislation setting up a tougher code of ethics for state officials and putting tighter controls on lobbyists, from left, Senate President Pro Tem Joseph Fasullo, Senate Majority Leader Joseph Lieberman and Sen. David Barry, D-Manchester.

New ethics code law signed

HARTFORD (UPI)—Legislation setting up a tougher code of ethics for state officials and putting tighter controls on lobbyists was signed into law Tuesday by Gov. Ella T. Grasso.

The ethics legislation does not formally take effect until Jan. 1 and is not as strong as the program Mrs. Grasso asked for in January. But the governor said some improvement was better than nothing at all.

The cornerstone of the program is a new state ethics commission composed of seven persons. Four will be named by legislative leaders and three by the governor.

The present commission was made up of eight lawmakers and was described by critics as weak and secrecy-ridden. Some of the new commission's sessions, to alleviate that, will be public.

The ethics code applies not only to state officials and lawmakers, but also executive branches of government. The ethics code also mandates the public disclosure of some financial information by lawmakers and top state officials. A broader definition of bribery is also included.

The law carries maximum penalties of up to five years in prison and a $5,000 fine for violation.

The lobbyist law, which takes effect Oct. 1, requires them to file monthly financial reports in much greater detail than those now required every three months. Lobbyists are also required to wear identification badges at the Capitol.

However, critics of the law said it — occasions when $25 or more spent on a state official or lawmaker must be listed. Critics said instead of taking out a group of lawmakers at one time, lobbyists will do it individually to avoid spending more than $25 at one sitting.

Violation carries a maximum penalty of one year in jail.

portsmouth, N.H. (UPI)—The antinuclear Clamshell Alliance said Tuesday if the 2,300 megawatt Seabrook station ever is completed, it will cost at least $1 billion.

That figure compares to the $50 million estimated by the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire when it proposed the plant in 1972, and the $2 billion the PSC said last October the plant would cost.

The Clamshell said its cost projection of $1 billion for Seabrook was based on the financial history of the project and the cost of other atomic plants.

Less than a year ago the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire said the project would cost $1.6 billion. The pricetag went up to $2 billion last October and now it's quietly being reported as $2.5 billion—almost six times the worth of the company," said Cathy Wolf, a Clamshell spokeswoman.

She said last year the PSC attacked a study by the financial director of the state Public Utilities commission which showed the plant would cost at least $2.6 billion. The report was not allowed to be entered as evidence in federal hearings on the project.

R&D and Rentschler

Back in the spring of 1925, Frederick B. Rentschler arrived in Hartford with some strong ideas on how a technically based company should build its future.

He had already founded and headed a successful airplane engine company in New Jersey. But he had left that company because his board of directors, putting immediate profits ahead of long-term performance, refused to spend money for research and development. Without R&D to develop new engines for future markets, Rentschler believed the company would become second-rate.

So he came to Hartford, found financial backing and plant space, and formed Pratt & Whitney Aircraft. Before the year was out, the first engine was built and on test. It was called the Wasp. The orders it brought quickly established the fledgling company. Rentschler then set about investing money to bring forth better engines in the years ahead.

The validity of his strategy was borne out over the years by the increasingly more advanced engines—first piston and then jet—that have come from Pratt & Whitney Aircraft. All grew out of R&D.

Take the engine known as the JTRD, which powers such jetliners as the Boeing 727 and 737 and McDonnell Douglas DC-9. It was developed in the early 1960s with company funds, and it's been in heavy production ever since to be-

Laetrile controversy overplayed

WASHINGTON—On the desk are seven letters, all from people who claim they have been cured of cancer by taking the controversial apricot pit substance trade-named Laetrile.

So be it. Maybe thinking can make you well. Maybe the stuff does work. I tend to side with the unbelievers, but I speak from the depths of my medical ignorance. What is shocking is that the writers of all seven letters ask me not to publish their names because they might be arrested for buying an illegal substance.

Big Brotherism
For God's sake! What has Big Brotherism wrought? Laetrile's bitterest enemies admit the stuff is harmless. Yet the Food and Drug Administration, the American Medical Association, and the Justice Department are warring law's big stick against Laetrile's promoters. They all point out that there is no scientific or medical evidence that the stuff works.

School board seeks information on sex discrimination charges

The Manchester Board of Education is recommending that the school administration and its attorney conduct additional investigation into the facts of allegations of sex discrimination against the board by the U.S. Department of Labor.

The recommendation came after extensive discussion in executive session Monday night with Atty. Thomas Sullivan.

Supt. James P. Kennedy said he could not reveal the specific nature of the board's questions because of the legal issue, but he said the board requested that the information be compiled as quickly as possible.

The issue may be brought up either during or after the board's July 25 meeting, Dr. Kennedy said.

The labor compliance recommendation was brought to the board's attention in early June. An audit by the Labor Department concluded with a recommendation that the board pay four years of back pay and grant immediate raises to eight female custodial employes and coaches.

The board put a freeze on $33,000 in salaries and services in the upcoming school budget until January 1978 as a precautionary measure should the labor compliance be ordered.

Pay hike postponed
WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter signed legislation denying members of Congress an annual cost-of-living pay increase due in October.

Members of Congress approved the legislation after first accepting a 29 per cent increase from $44,600 to $57,500 a year in February. The legislation barring an additional increase this year also affects members of the Judiciary and high-ranking officials in the Executive Branch.

The bill Carter signed is effective for only one year. Members of Congress, unless they pass a similar measure, would be eligible for another pay raise in October, 1978.

The board agreed to seek advice of Atty. Sullivan who handled the related labor matter four years ago in the initial attempt to comply with the federal regulations.

Agency compiles profile of town from census data

A report compiled by the Department of Human Services, based on 1970 census figures, shows that 44 per cent of the Town of Manchester's 47,994 population is working.

The figures were included in "Manchester Profile," a one-page summary of facts and figures about the town based on the seven-year-old census. The report was prepared by Ellen Bangasser.

The study also shows that 16 per cent of the population was elderly and 7 per cent was minority-group members.

A total of 97 per cent of the town's 15,469 housing units were occupied. Of those, 61.7 per cent were owner-occupied and 38.3 renter-occupied.

The report also lists 2.3 per cent of the units as substandard—246 had inadequate plumbing, 106 had inadequate kitchen facilities. A total of 3.7 per cent of the units were classified as overcrowded, having more than one person per room.

The report also shows that only six of the 28 other towns in the Capitol Planning Region had a lower 1970 median family income than Manchester's median income of $12,356. The towns below Manchester were—East Hartford, East Windsor, Enfield, Hartford, Tolland, and Vernon.

Three towns had more substandard housing units than Manchester, and five towns had more overcrowded housing units.

Alan Mason, director of human services, said that the profile will be used to provide any information to businesses or persons interested in finding out about the community.

The information will be updated as future studies are done. He said, for instance, that the recently approved housing study will provide more up-to-date information concerning housing in Manchester.

The report will also be redone when the 1980 census figures are made available, he said.

Bill would second guess FDA on saccharin issue

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Legislation approved by a House subcommittee would second guess the Food and Drug Administration and block any government ban on saccharin for 18 months without new evidence it causes cancer.

The measure, approved 9 to 3 by the House Health and Environment subcommittee, would negate FDA plans to take the sweetener off supermarket shelves by fall, and make it available only as an over-the-counter drug.

Subcommittee Chairman Paul Rogers, D-Fla., said his legislation would not prevent FDA action if new tests show saccharin causes cancer in humans.

But he said it would block FDA plans to ban saccharin based on Canadian tests showing it caused cancer in rats and a second Canadian study linking the sweetener to bladder cancer in humans.

The legislation now goes to the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

The House bill differs slightly from legislation which has cleared the Senate Human Resources Committee and is awaiting action by another panel. The Senate bill also imposes an 18-month moratorium on the saccharin ban but requires warning labels and bans advertising of saccharin products during the period.

Extensive debate preceded House subcommittee action.

Opponents said available scientific data was adequate to document that a risk of cancer existed for saccharin users and the FDA was correct in ordering it off the market.

Rogers and his supporters argued that more conclusive test data was necessary.

In a companion move, the committee rejected a move to allow the FDA to complete necessary administrative work on the saccharin ban as it could be put into effect immediately after the 18-month moratorium.

An FDA spokesman said as a result of the action it might take five to seven additional months—or a total of about two years—for the saccharin ban to be placed in effect.

Report urges import tax be imposed on Canadian fish

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — The University of Rhode Island report Friday urged an import tax on low-priced Canadian fish to keep it from dominating American markets, according to a University of Rhode Island report.

It recommended a levy of 30 cents per pound.

The report, prepared by a team of economists headed by Dr. Virgil J. Norton, said that the Canadian government's fish subsidies allow Canadian fish to be sold in the United States for less than its production cost.

Partly as a result, very little of the frozen fish now consumed in the United States was caught by American fishermen, according to figures in the study.

The researchers said American fishermen will be unable to reap economic benefits from the new 200-mile fishing limit unless the Canadian edge is counterbalanced.

In addition to direct per-pound subsidies, low-interest government loans for equipment maintenance help Canadian fishermen cut their overhead costs, the report said.

It said if an American and a Canadian boat fished side by side and caught the same kinds of fish in the same waters, the Canadian fish would probably go to market at a lower wholesale price.

The report said there is "little doubt" that the U.S. could justify an import duty of 30 cents per pound. The study is part of a wide-ranging project on the impact of the 200-mile fishing limit.

Meriden (UPI) — The American Heart Association's Connecticut affiliate has moved its headquarters from Hartford to 71 Parker Ave., Meriden.

The association said Meriden was selected because of its central location in the state and easy access to major highways.

The Meriden organization is headquartered for all heart associations in Connecticut.

Adoption subsidies proposed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Vice President Walter Mondale Tuesday proposed a system of subsidies to help low and moderate income families adopt foster children, particularly those who are hard to place because of handicaps.

"We want to reform the current system to help low and moderate income families who are willing to provide a home for hard-to-place children by permitting the use of (federal) foster care funds for adoption subsidies," said Mondale.

Hard to place children are over 3 years old, are handicapped emotionally and physically, or are black or of mixed racial background. Foster parents get subsidies for them — Mondale said the government spent nearly $200 million to support 117,000 last year — but they must give up this average $2,000 annual subsidy if the children are legally adopted.

This is sometimes impossible because some of these children need very expensive medical care. The proposal would help moderate-income families adopt these children by allowing Medicaid benefits to follow the child "with respect to conditions which make them hard to place."

Liddy to be given parole on Sept. 7.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Parole Commission Tuesday gave early freedom to G. Gordon Liddy — the Watergate conspirator who never talked and who got the longest sentence of anyone convicted in the scandal that toppled a President.

He will be paroled Sept. 7 on the condition that Liddy pay or otherwise dispose of a $40,000 fine by that time. President Carter commuted his 20-year sentence to 8 years on April 12, which made him eligible for parole July 9.

Liddy, 46, now at the U.S. prison camp at Allenwood, Pa., has been in a succession of jails and prisons since Jan. 30, 1973. He was free on bond for three months, from Oct. 15, 1974, to Jan. 22, 1975.

Liddy had an initial hearing by a panel of commission examiners at Allenwood on June 3. The commission was to consider Liddy's case last week but had no quorum.

Liddy was convicted of conspiracy, burglary and attempted bugging and wiretapping two cases: the June 17, 1972, raids on the Democratic National Headquarters and the September, 1971, break-in at the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

Laetrile hearings planned

HARTFORD (UPI) — Connecticut lawmakers said Tuesday they will hold a hearing on the controversial drug laetrile with an eye towards possible legislation on the subject.

Rep. Paul LaRosa, D-Hartford, co-chairman of the Public Health and Safety Committee, said a subcommittee of his panel would hold hearings on the subject sometime next month.

Laetrile, which is legal in 11 states, has caused a public furor in many states with most doctors claiming it has no effect on cancer and only prevents patients from using more effective types of treatment.

But some persons claim it can stop the spread of cancer and even if it doesn't, it does no harm and therefore should not be banned.

FDI chief tells panel Laetrile is worthless

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The head of the Food and Drug Administration said Tuesday he and his colleagues are convinced that Laetrile is worthless and dangerous.

Dr. Donald Kennedy told the Senate Health subcommittee that evidence shows Laetrile is worthless against cancer and also raises "alarming uncertainty" about the safety of the substance derived from apricot pits.

Kennedy, whose agency bans Laetrile from interstate commerce, said Laetrile is a profitable business for its promoters.

"Laetrile pays and pays well," he said. "My anger derives from the sympathy I feel for those cancer patients who turn to Laetrile. They are being victimized twice — once by the disease and once by the promoters."

Dr. Guy Newell, director of the National Cancer Institute, told the committee that even though Laetrile is ineffective, about 50,000 cancer patients in the United States take it each year at great cost to themselves and their families.

The hearing followed a report Monday on the results of a fresh approach to testing Laetrile. The experiments found the substance ineffective against human cancers implanted in a defenseless breed of mice.

Laetrile has not yet been tested on a scientific basis in humans. However, it has been suggested that the National Cancer Institute sponsor such tests in an effort to quell the Laetrile controversy. Promoters of the substance claim that Laetrile helps fight cancer.

Hospital budgets approved

Vernon

Rockville General Hospital has approved the 1977 and 1978 budgets approved. The hospital was among five others reaching settlements Tuesday with the state Commission on Hospitals and Health Care.

These hospitals were among a total of 31 hospitals throughout the state which filed lawsuits against the commission after it cut a total of $44 million from the budget requests.

The negotiations restored $12 million to the requests.

Rockville General received its requested $8.3 million. The commission had originally cut it by $800,000. The budget was due to go into effect last October.

The hospital had also submitted a budget package for 1978 that would give it $7,222,000 in net income and $8 million in operating expenses. This full amount was also granted by the commission.

Rockville General Hospital is also waiting for final approval from the commission on its proposed expansion plan.

A rough draft of the plan, which would cost $2.1 million, was submitted to the commission for its questions and comments before the final plan is drafted. Two other plans for expansion have been turned down.

Painter of famed faces likes children the best

By BARBARA RICHMOND

John Norton of England looks the part of the perfect English gentleman that he is, even to his soft-spoken British accent. Norton was in New York recently to attend a reception in his honor and also visited the Rosenfeld home in Ellington.

"The Many Faces of America" is the title of his latest book. Norton, an internationally famous portrait painter, has done the faces of hundreds of famous people but said his favorite work is doing portraits of children.

While in Ellington he did a full-length portrait of Miss June Ellen Rosenfeld.

Norton, dressed in neat blue jeans, a white shirt and ascot, said that a full-length oil on canvas, since his home is in England, since 1963 he has spent about three months of each year in the United States. He admits to being somewhat of a vagabond and said he uses the money he receives for his portraits to travel to other countries to paint more faces.

The fees for his work run from $6,000 for a full-length oil on canvas to an adult, to $750 for drawings of a child, to $500 for a drawing.

Norton said he requires four to six sittings, usually lasting for half an hour to one hour each (with five 15-minute rest periods). Drawings and pastels require about three sittings.

Sandra Payson and Patricia Kennedy Lawford were among the hosts of the special reception for Norton in New York. At the reception, New York State Commissioner Orin Lehman presented the New York Public Library with a copy of Norton's book.

Norton said when he planned to do the painting of Dr. DeBakey, the famous heart surgeon, the doctor invited him to watch him perform open heart surgery in Houston, Tex., and in London.

Somebody Norton would like to paint the Queen of England and the President of the United States. He also would like to do Prince Charles. He did many portraits of children while visiting in Australia earlier this year. One of his other books is "The History of Portraits of Children," and while his latest book doesn't contain any faces of children, this earlier one does, along with step-by-step basic information on how to portray children.

In an article he wrote on the art and craft of portrait painting, Norton said, "The painting of a portrait may be considered to be one of two things, a work of fine craftsmanship, or a great work of art, and I am sure most readers will agree that there is a breadth of distinction between the two."

Long before the Watergate fiasco in Washington, Norton, who said he thinks of himself as somewhat of a psychologist, was quoted as saying, he would consider it a big thing to happen to him if he could paint President Nixon. He was asked at that time if he thought it would be a difficult face to do and Norton's answer was, "He has a face that conceals a lot and doesn't give away much."

Norton will continue traveling to capture as many faces as he can. He also plans to continue writing more books but he still lives in England the best and he returns to his home in Fulham as often as he can.

Calvin Hutchinson, Bolton sanitation, was asked by the Board of Health on Tuesday, "What happened? Why did the water at Bolton Lake test so bad and just how bad is it?"

Neither Hutchinson nor Dr. C. Wendell Wickersham, town health officer, could answer why.

However, Dr. Wickersham said the Alpha-Omega Inn would have to stop using the well water for drinking purposes until the well was sanitized and repeat cultures taken.

Hutchinson said he is recommending no one swim in the lake until repeat water tests are completed.

Septic system repair

The order by the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) setting a timetable for fixing the septic system at the Alpha-Omega Inn, "progressing nicely" even though an extension was given on the first phase.

The order called for an engineering study to be completed by June 30 but an extension until July 11 was granted.

Randy May of the DEP said he expects to receive the report today. He said one reason the extension was given was so the inn's water usage could be monitored during the holiday season.

May said he is "really pleased with the progress being made at the site." He said other phases of the order have not been granted an extension. The order calls for the new system to be in operation by Sept. 30.

Richard Webb, assistant attorney general handling the case, said he expects a judgment from the court against Negro Brothers today. Court action is set for Aug. 24. "Smoke alarm sounded, Johnson Rd., Tolland.

18 lots in Coventry may get PZC's okay

Town Planner Gregory Padick has told the Coventry Planning and Zoning Commission (PZC) he will probably recommend conditional approval of Robert Snyder's subdivision application for 18 lots on Carpenter Rd. near Broadway.

Most of the complaints of adjoining landowners have focused on increased water runoff onto their properties that may be caused by development of the 30-acre tract.

"If the drainage is properly designed, the water runoff need not be a concern for disapproval," Padick said.

Padick said erosion problems can be dealt with by further major subdivisions. The commission has also asked for details on planned driveways for the next PZC meeting, July 25.

In other business, the PZC voted 3 to 1 to require iron boundary line markers on subdivisions. Town Councilman Robert Olmstead complained that this might involve considerable expense to the town by requiring surveying of town-owned property.

Council Chairman Jesse Brainard also criticized the new regulation for being vague.

The commission also directed Padick to seek an opinion from Town Atty. Abbot Schwelb on whether the town is legally obligated to maintain its roads in a condition suitable for development.

The question arose on an application from Frank Hastings for a residential subdivision on Bishop Lane, which is in a deteriorated condition. Padick obtained estimates showing that it would cost about $7,000 to bring the road up to standard.

The council recently advised the PZC that Bishop Lane was not included in its five-year road improvement plan.

The PZC also approved the application of Reuben Grahn for the construction of a small office building off Main St. near the old Bidwell Tavern. The approval is conditional, requiring adequate landscaping and parking facilities.

The Coventry Police Department is investigating a recent incident at the beach which resulted in the firing of three lifeguards for allegedly smoking marijuana and drinking beer while on duty.

The police action is in response to a resident's complaint.

Town Council Chairman Jesse Brainard said Monday night he would not take up the matter at next week's commission meeting as he had stated earlier.

Brainard said he polled council members who felt the problem was an internal affair of the Parks and Recreation Commission.

The commission voted in executive session last week to uphold the firing of the three men by Head Lifeguard Tom Duffy.

Commission member Larry Naviaux said Tuesday he did not oppose the firing of the lifeguards, as he had reported in Monday's Herald.

Naviaux said commission minutes, which indicated he opposed the firing, were wrong.

"I did vote to fire," Naviaux said, adding that the commission was a "close-knit group."

To ancient Greeks agoraphobia meant fear of the marketplace. To modern Americans it means an illogical fear of an unknown so threatening that sufferers are unable to leave their homes or admit to anyone they need help, according to Dr. David Barlow, 35, a clinical psychologist at Brown University Medical School (shown) who treats people suffering from agoraphobia. ## MPHNA nurse in ad

If the nurse in the Blue Cross television commercials looks familiar to you, she should.

Karen Nash, nurse supervisor at the Manchester Public Health Nursing Association, has recently completed taping a TV commercial on home health care.

All began several months ago when Ms. Nash saw a commercial that she felt didn't accurately portray home health care. She wrote to the producer telling how she thought it should be done.

As a result, Ms. Nash was asked to appear in the next commercial.

She can be seen demonstrating home health care on Channel 30 the following dates and times: July 18, sometime between 5 and 6 p.m.; July 22, 11 and 11:30 p.m., and July 28, 7:30 and 8 p.m.

Agoraphobia creates many recluses

By TERRY ANZUR

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — It can strike the successful business man in the conference room and paralyze his career.

It can grip a housewife as she drives a station wagon toward the grocery store, forcing a retreat into her bedroom that could last for decades.

It is an anxiety that broods across a person's mind like waves pounding an ocean cliff. It rises in beads of sweat, fear of fainting or loss of self-control.

"Lock your door" "Lock your door and stay inside," the quickening heartbeat warns. "What is out there can kill you."

This fear, doctors say, rules the lives of people with agoraphobia. Victims are so afraid of open, public places that they stay in their homes or other "safe places" as if their lives depended on it.

"It's a constant terror, a nightmare that begins when they get up in the morning and lasts until they go to sleep at night," says Dr. David Barlow, 35, a Brown University Medical School professor and Director of Education and Training at Butler Hospital, a Brown-affiliated mental care center.

Using techniques he learned while studying at the University of Vermont and with Dr. Joseph Wolpe of Temple University in Philadelphia, Barlow has treated more than 40 agoraphobia cases.

"It can affect the course of a person's whole life, whom they marry, the type of job," Barlow says. "It can shut down their social life."

Most patients admit it is irrational. They don't let anyone because they fear it will only confirm the suspicion that they are going crazy and need to be put away. So they put themselves away," Barlow says.

"I've seen people in their 50s and 60s who were managed to get by that way most of their lives," he says. Although society makes it easier for women to assume the dependent role of the agoraphobic, men are also victims.

Terrified

A businessman, once stricken with panic during a conference, felt he was losing control in front of his associates. Terrified it would happen again, he insisted

'Toughed it out'

It can get so severe that a suburban housewife probably became agoraphobic while still a teen-ager. She remembered driving downtown for a shopping trip, driving through a tunnel, and being gripped with terror.

The woman "toughed it out" during her teens and 20s. "When she drove her car away from home she was very frightened beyond her own safe street," Barlow says.

"She would pull over to the side of the road. She worried about what people would think if they saw her."

It often helped to take her children along; their chatter masked her fear.

"I've seen people in their 50s and 60s who were managed to get by that way most of their lives," he says. Although society makes it easier for women to assume the dependent role of the agoraphobic, men are also victims.

Because unknown numbers of agoraphobics are believed shut off from their "unsafe" world, they may be unaware that treatment can help. They may fear they will die if they venture out to seek it.

According to Barlow, one method is to "flood" patients with what they fear. Most patients left on a city street are told to find their way home.

Under medical supervision, the cold-turkey technique can bury fear in as few as two sessions. Any sufferer who tries it alone courts disaster, Barlow says.

Gradual recovery

He favors a more gradual recovery, which was successful in treating the housewife and the businessman. In 20 sessions of short field trips, without use of drugs that could dull awareness, the patient learns there is nothing out to get him.

Similar therapy is available at hospitals in Mississippi, California, Utah, Florida and New York.

All of a sudden," says Barlow, "they're like kids out of a boarding school. So many simple things become pleasures again."

South Windsor
The tour of the roadway by town officials was spurred by Deputy Mayor Robert Myette's claim that the base of Pierce Rd. did not meet the initial specification for a processed base and the road was deteriorating because of substitute materials.

Myette said that during the inspection trip he was able to examine materials under the road in the area where sewers are now being installed. He contends the aggregate base material was too large to compact and bit after rolling of the road.

Myette said more of the road base would be visible for inspection when trenches were dug for sewer laterals in the near future.

Talbot said town engineers agree that the road base does not meet specifications and that some material beneath the road appears to measure two inches or more. The construction company, however, disagrees and says the base used was according to recommended and approved specifications.

Sewer construction is expected to continue in the area for at least a few more weeks. The road will again be re-examined by officials.

Golfers equal at Sutton

SUTTON, Mass. (UPI) — All golfers are created equal when they tee off on the tricky Pleasant Valley Country Club course.

And because no player has ever won more than once in 10 previous PGA tournaments on the long and sometimes bushy course, there is no favorite in the $50,000 Pleasant Valley Classic that gets under way Thursday.

The leading money earner at Pleasant Valley, Lee Elder, has never won the tournament, although he has finished second twice and third once.

The 7,000-yard, par 71 course features thick grass just off the fairways and around the rough. The long hitters have had as much trouble conquering the course as the short-ball hitters.

Jack Nicklaus, for example, second by one stroke to Tom Watson in the British Open last week, fared poorly on the Pleasant Valley course 12 years ago in the Carling World Open and has not been back since. He is playing this year only because the tournament is one of the designated stops on the PGA circuit.

The lure of Nicklaus and Watson has created a ticket demand unmatched since 1965.

"We're $50,000 ahead of last year in ticket sales," Pleasant Valley's Cuz Mingola said early this week. "It all boils down to one man, Nicklaus, just judging from the calls we've been getting."

While Nicklaus, Watson, Gary Player, Lee Trevino, Hubert Green and Ben Crenshaw will be the crowd favorites, they still must contend with defending champion Bud Allin, a who shot a 7-under-par 27 last year.

Lenti Farm findings challenged

By GREG PEARSON
Herald Reporter

Jay J. Giles, Manchester's director of public works, has questioned some of the findings of an engineer who was hired by neighboring residents to study detention ponds in the proposed Lenti Farms tract subdivision. Giles also said that maintenance of the detention facility will cost the town at least $1,000 per year.

Researchers find trampoline good exerciser for elderly

AMHERST, Mass. (UPI) — Bouncing on a small trampoline may be fun for kids, but it's also a good way for elderly people to exercise, according to a former Olympic athlete and exercise expert.

Gideon Ariel, founder and director of research of Computerized Biomechanical Analysis Inc., says the trampoline may be one of the best forms of exercise for the nation's growing numbers of elderly people.

Ariel is an exercise scientist and his company analyzes human motion. "We're selling ideas. We're a dream company," he said.

"We just developed an exercise machine called a TRAMM for elderly people. There are 30 million people over 65 in this country who don't have a way to exercise. So we developed a machine that looks like a little trampoline that will prevent shock. You use the same amount of energy as you do when you run, but your heart rate doesn't go high," he said.

Formed in 1971, Ariel and three others — an engineer, a computer programmer and another exercise scientist — have been doing exercise research since their company was formed in 1971.

They worked with discus thrower Mac Wilkins before he won the Olympic gold medal last year. They also predicted a leg injury to New England Patriots running back Sam Cunningham. And, they have recently developed a tennis ball that will be easier to control when it hits the racket.

"We think the best exercise is one where you can maximize the burning of oxygen and calories with a minimum of stress and increase of blood pressure," Ariel said.

Uses computers

The firm does its research by utilizing high-speed film and computers.

"By analyzing the film we can calculate acceleration, velocity, the forces involved and the angle of force applied. Then we can estimate the efficiency of performance," Ariel said.

CBA also uses other machines, many of them designed by company engineer Paul Tartaglia, to evaluate equipment.

Negative heels failed

Ariel says negative heel shoes were among the items tested by CBA, and he gives them a failing grade.

"Not only do they not help you, but they could hurt you," he said. And, according to Ariel, some shoes that claim to have negative heels really don't — "they are built up inside. They look like negative heels, but they're really like any other shoes."

The company is working on ideas for athletic equipment that could make exercise easier, less painful and more enjoyable. They're also researching children's exercise.

Exercise motivation

"We're trying to use ideas that will motivate children

Guittar is promoted

Guittar, 46, will succeed Tom Johnson, who will become president of the Los Angeles Times Aug. 1. Guittar's appointment becomes effective Aug. 8.

The development has been proposed by Robert Stone and Jack Goldberg, but has drawn stiff opposition from surrounding residents.

The neighbors have said that the cluster zoning, which permits Residence A, zone-size houses and lots, would be out of character with surrounding homes, which are zoned predominantly Residence AA.

Another major concern has been the two drainage detention ponds that would be located on the ten acres that the developers would deed to the town as open space under cluster zoning requirements.

A group of residents hired Wilson Alford, an engineer from Windsor, who raised questions about the design of the drainage facilities as planned by Griswold & Fuss. Alford said that the ponds were planned for a 25-year storm when most drainage areas are actually planned for a 100-year storm, a storm that in one year has a 1/100 of a chance of occurring.

Giles, however, said that the 25-year plan is in keeping with the town's Public Improvement Specifications and with the Department of Transportation requirements for watersheds of less than 1,000 acres. (The entire watershed area is 176 acres, Giles said.)

Alford also said that the earth berms for the dike would not survive the 100-year storm causing flooding problems.

But, Giles wrote, "In fact, the earth berm has been designed to act as a spillway capable of passing the difference in flow between the 25-year and 100-year storms without erosion."

One concern raised by residents was that the ponds would cause an increase in cost to the town because they would have to be maintained regularly. Giles asked for a study on this matter from Timothy O'Sullivan, highway superintendent.

O'Sullivan estimated the yearly cost at $4,000 per year, but Giles felt that some of the cost estimates in the report were high. He said that yearly maintenance costs would range between $1,000 and $2,000.

Giles also discounts a proposed alternative to the detention ponds — the installation of a larger drainage pipe from the subdivision. The pipe would be 72-inches, he said.

Giles said such a drainage setup "would create a potentially dangerous situation that does not exist with the proposed detention facilities."

The PZC conducted a public hearing on the proposed subdivision on June 13. About 150 persons attended the hearing, and most were in opposition to the proposal. The PZC does not meet in August and will have to decide on the proposed development at its next meeting, July 25, unless an extension is issued.

Demonstrator gets a free ride

A member of the May 4 Coalition had to be carried from "Tent City" by Kent State University campus police Tuesday when he refused to obey a court order to leave the grounds being occupied by demonstrators protesting the construction of a gymnasium near the site where four students were killed in another confrontation several years ago. ## If baby needs a new pair of shoes town farrier makes them take shape

By GREG PEARSON
Herald Reporter

It's a job that requires the steadiness of a carpenter, the strength of a blacksmith, and the concern of a veterinarian.

And, it's a job that Carnell Brumbach wouldn't give up for all of the ranches along the Rio Grande.

Brumbach is a farrier, a person who shoes horses. He recently opened his one-man business, "Two Flags Horse Shoeing," which he operates from his home at 151 Center St.

"I wanted to shoe ever since I got out of high school," he said as he headed to an assignment at the Bolduc family residence on Garnet Rd.

Brumbach was born and lived for 24 years in Pennsylvania, where he raised and showed horses. He moved to Manchester a little over a year ago with his wife, Bonnie, and their two children.

Earlier this year, he spent eight weeks learning the horse-shoeing trade at Oklahoma Farrier's College in Sperry, Okla. Brumbach said that there are several similar schools in the country, but added, "There aren't too many that are as good as this one."

The school's curriculum includes regular horse-shoeing sessions and lessons on how to control a less-than-cooperative horse.

Judging from his interest in the job, Brumbach was probably an enthusiastic student at the school.

"I like to get around and meet people. It's a good job for that. And, I love to work with horses," he said.

He looks the part, too. He wears high boots, blue denim, and an engraved belt. And while he drives his blue pickup, he even dons his cowboy hat.

Brumbach is not a very big man, but his muscular arms have obviously lifted their share of anvils.

Under normal circumstances, it takes him an hour to 90 minutes to shoe a horse. As he gains experience, he may become even faster, he said.

When he arrived at the Bolduc home, he put on his shoeing apron, switched from his cowboy hat to his blue Oklahoma's Farrier's College cap, and began shoeing Velvet, the horse owned by Denise Bolduc.

The first step is the removal of the old shoes. The shoes are worn to protect the horse's hoofs, particularly if the animal frequently travels on hard or rocky surfaces. Under such riding conditions, the shoes have to be replaced every six to eight weeks, Brumbach said.

After the old shoe is removed, Brumbach uses clippers to cut extra growth in the hoof area. The horse feels little of the effect of the clipping. It is similar to trimming a human fingernail.

He also uses a knife to pare away any dead sole and uses a rasp to make sure the hoof is level.

He then takes a new horse shoe, which he buys from a distributor in East Canaan, and measures it against the horse's foot. He places the shoe on the anvil and gives it a few sturdy shots with a hammer to mold it into the proper shape for this particular horse.

It often requires more than one trip to the anvil until the shoe has been formed into just the right shape.

Brumbach nails the shoe onto the hoof and files its edges to ensure a smooth fit.

Through the process, he doesn't say much except for a stern "here" when the horse appears to be getting ornery.

Horse shoeing is also a very physical profession.

Throughout his shoeing of Velvet, Brumbach was frequently bending down and twisting around to get into the proper position.

He said that it will still take him awhile before he can go out and do a full-day's load of horses.

"I couldn't just go out and do seven horses today. You've got to condition yourself. It's like a sport — it can be brutal," he said.

Even though the work can be tiring and the job can be troublesome, particularly if the horse is uncooperative, Brumbach leaves little doubt about his feeling for the work.

After one three-hour session with an energetic horse, he said, "I love it. I just love it. You get kicked around, you get bit a few times, sometimes you even get jabbed by your own nail. But, I love it."

News for senior citizens

By WALLY FORTIN
Hi! Well, tomorrow morning two buses will be leaving our center at 8:30 for the Rockingham race track.

Trips
Speaking of trips, this past Monday morning, we registered for the one-day jaunt to the Alps Beer Festival in the Catskills, N.Y.

Setback
Here at the center last Friday afternoon we had 40 setback players and the winners were: Ada Rojas, 135; Rene Maire, 133; Bea Mader, 129; Fritz Wilkinson, 127; Archie Houghaling, 127; Mike DeSimone, 125; Annie Johnson, 121; Bernadette Risley, 120; Ann Fisher, 120; Nina Reuber, 119.

Pinocle
After a lovely lunch the action moved upstairs for pinocle. We had 13 tables and the following winners: Violet Dion, 847; Joe Windsor, 836; Helena Gavilino, 785; Fritz Wilkinson, 781; George Last, 775; Robina Carroll, 757; Archie Houghaling, 740; Esther Anderson, 733; Rene Maire, 727; Marie Burke, 727; Roy Durey, 726; Ann Fisher, 712; Marie Hebenstreit, 716.

Rockport
Next week on Monday, July 18, we will register for the Rockport trip. This trip is quite expensive but includes a real old-fashioned clam and lobster bake and a nice boat ride around Gloucester Harbor, bus ride and tips for $80.50 per person.

Well, I see where all you Red Sox fans are smiling once again and I can't say I blame you. When a team loses night straight games and a couple days later ends up in first place, that's not saying too much for the competition.

Prices effective thru July 10, 1977 in Manchester, Vernon and East Hartford. We reserve the right to limit quantities. Not responsible for Typographical Errors.

Of consumer concern

Avoid questionable sales

"Sales" that represent no actual savings to consumers have been the subject of Consumer Protection Department action in the past and shall continue to be investigated in the future.

In a legitimate sale, each item on sale must be priced lower than the previous amount charged. For instance, a men's clothing store which advertises "Suits, reg. $135.00, now only $69.95" has to have sold the advertised suits at the higher price.

About town

Calvary Church will have a midweek service tonight at 7 at the church. The public is invited to attend the service of prayer, praise and Bible study.

Illing Junior High honor roll

The following students are listed on the Illing Junior High School honor roll for the fourth quarter.

Grade 7
Michael Atlas, Curtis Bentley, Leon Butterson, Christine Brown, Paula Browne, Bryan Buono, Craig Camre.

Grade 8
Jeanine Barber, Laurie Bishaw, Marjorie Botterson, Andrew Browne, Michael Buono, Robert Camire, Patricia Cane.

Grade 9

Congress bites the bullet

Washington window

Two issues members of Congress most dread to debate in public and vote on for the record are ethics and a pay raise.

The pay raise was a vital part of the ethics package. It was a promise. If you vote for ethics, if you vote to limit your outside income, you are going to get a pay raise.

Handling of the sex scandals last year and the pay boost this year, forced these moments of agony on the honorable members of the House.

THE FAMILY LAWYER

Accidents at Camp

It was Activity Hour at a summer camp, and a group of boys were having a water fight on the grass. One youngster, making a quick turn, skidded and hit the ground with a thud. Upshot: A damage suit against the camp.

torney in a court hearing. "The counselor in charge had no business allowing such a dangerous game." But the court decided the game was not unusually dangerous, at least in terms of the camping life. Holding the camp not liable, the judge said he did not want to "so sterilize camping activities as to render it sedentary." This is the law's usual attitude - that recreation at camp is expected to include some degree of risk. Courts take a similar view with regard to the condition of camp grounds. Thus: A court said no, because darkness was appropriate to camping atmosphere. At another camp, a rustic trail led from the bunks to the social hall. Walking there one night, a boy strayed off the trail and collided with a tree. Could the camp be held liable for having failed to string lights along the pathway? A court said no, because darkness was appropriate to camping atmosphere.

The judge commented: "Floodlighting the woods would be unfair to (campers) who seek the adventure of living closer to nature, participating in astronomical study at night or bird study before dawn." Still, hazards must be kept within reasonable limits.

A girl camper, swinging on a ladder bar, lost her grip and fell onto some rocks. In these circumstances, a court sported added danger. ordered the camp to pay a public service feature for damages for injuries suffered by the girl.

MVD Info

Q. Recently you told of ways to avoid overloading by the car's engine. Can you give me some remedial action for an overheated engine? A. Remember - never pour cold water into an overheated engine or you may crack the engine block. The mistake is often made.

After the engine has cooled, remove the radiator cap and check the coolant level. If your car is equipped with a "surge tank," check the coolant level at that point.

Look for leaks or breaks in the radiator, surge tank, or in the hoses, including heater as well as radiator hoses.

Correct the problem if possible. Friction tape or adhesive tape can sometimes be used to temporarily stop or slow a leak in a hose until you can get to a service facility to have it replaced. If the hose is split or ruptured near the end, sometimes you can remove the hose end, cut off the damaged section, and replace the hose.

It may not be possible to do this with shorter hoses, or hoses of larger diameter that are reshaped during manufacture.

If a source of water is available, replace the lost fluid.

If possible, to do so, (engine temperature drops to normal range after taking remedial action indicated), drive to the nearest service facility and have proper repairs done. NEVER drive a car with the engine overheated or with insufficient coolant. If there is no source of water available to replace lost coolant, if the car returns to an overheated condition, or if a hose is ruptured too badly, arrange for roadside repairs to correct your problem.

CAUTION: If you are able to make temporary repairs so that you can drive to the nearest facility (service), don't move the car until the engine has cooled down. When you get to the service facility, WARN THE ATTENDANT that the engine has been overheating so that he can take precautions to make sure he is not burned or scalded.

Q - How many times can a veteran receiving GI Bill benefits change schools?

A - There is no limitation on the number of times an eligible veteran or serviceman can change schools if no change of program is involved provided his conduct and progress were satisfactory at the previous institution.

Q - What must I do to correct my military records?

A - A request for correction must be filed with the service concerned on Department of Defense Form DD-149, which may be obtained at any VA office.

Q - I am in receipt of 60 per cent of my service-connected disability compensation. I have a wife and two children. My 17-year-old son has married. When will my compensation payments be reduced?

A - Reductions will be effective at the end of the calendar year in which the child was married.

Reading Matter Originally a magazine was a storehouse, not a periodical. "The Gentleman's Magazine," introduced to the public in 1731, was the first publication to use the word in its new meaning, stating in its introduction that the publication was intended to "store up" a collection of various subjects. "As in a magazine."

Social Security

Q. I retired about a year ago and get monthly Social Security checks. I recently took a temporary job and much to my surprise, my boss is taking Social Security taxes out of my pay even though I told him I get Social Security payments. Is he doing the right thing?

Q. I have both hospital and medical insurance under Medicare. Because of a severe high blood pressure problem, I have to see my doctor once a month. Should I save his bills and send them all in at one time, or is it better to send in each bill as I get it?

A. Once you've met the $60 deductible, it helps speed up payment if you send in each bill as you get it. Accumulating your bills and sending them in long after you receive the services will delay payment.

Picnic plate

In the good old summertime, picnics and cookouts are popular, and finding new and different recipes can sometimes pose a problem.

A few readers sent in recipes which I believe you will find easy to prepare and delicious to taste. From Mrs. Janet B. Ghanon of Warehouse Point comes this recipe for Supreme Crab Dip.

Supreme Crab Dip
Soften 1 package (8 oz.) cream cheese. Add 1 tablespoon milk, 2 tablespoons chopped onion, 2 tablespoons horseradish, 1 (7 1/2 oz.) canned crabmeat, drained and flaked. Mix all well. Put in medium baking dish and bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Serve hot with crackers.

Another reader who remembered meeting me when we attended the Black Watch concert at the Civic Center in Hartford a couple of years ago sent along some light summer recipes. She asked to remain anonymous.

Orange-Pineapple Molded Salad
1 small pkg. orange gelatin
1 small can crushed pineapple
1 can mandarin oranges
1 cup boiling water
2 tbs. sugar
1/2 pint sour cream
Add sugar to gelatin and mix. Add water, then crushed pineapple, without draining. Then add drained orange segments. Let set in refrigerator until slightly thickened, mix in sour cream, stir and pour into mold.

On second thought

By Jan Warren

The other night when we took our kids out to eat in a fancy restaurant and 13-year-old John tried to drink from his finger bowl, I knew, that in one important respect, I had failed as a mother.

Believe me, I have tried to give my kids a little polish. I really want them to feel at home in any social situation. But, I've been so busy with the rudiments of good behavior, like not talking with your mouth full, and not hiding the lima beans in the African violets, that I haven't had time for the finishing touches.

The incident with John and the finger bowl prompted me to give him a little briefing when we reached home.

"John," I said, facing him squarely, "it's time I had a little talk with you about the facts of life."

"Oh, that stuff," said John, eyeing me self-consciously. "I already know about that. Dad told me."

"Not about this stuff, he hasn't," I said. "I'm talking about the facts of etiquette. About finger bowls, holding chairs for ladies, and what to wear when an invitation says, 'black tie.'"

"You've got to be kidding," chortled John, sweating his blue-jeaned knee for emphasis. "There is no...ever...if I live to be a hundred that I'll go to a party in a black tie."

"That's not what your grandmother thinks. She thinks you're going to go to bed to be president. And, it's my job to see that you pick up a few social graces on the way."

"That night when I went to bed, I vowed to start on the etiquette lessons the next morning at breakfast. I caught John in a faux pas, before he'd finished his orange juice.

"Not No! No!" I said, intercepting his arm as it lunged across the table. "If you want the bread, ask for it properly."

"Not No! No!" I said again a few minutes later. "Cut your toast. Don't cram the whole thing in your mouth at once."

"Look, Ma, all you want to do is polish me up so I can be president like Jimmy Carter, right?"

"You might put it that way," I agreed.

"Okay, then what are you worried about? Jimmy Carter wears blue jeans. He runs around the White House in his bare feet. And his favorite food is Southern fried chicken. You know," he added with the air of a man who knows he's won his case, "the kind that's fingerlicking good."

Newspaper without reporters

By RICHARD VAN ARBE TORONTO (UPI) — Global News carries stories about developments in the Middle East, peace proposals for Rhodesia, a coup in Asia, an historic election in Europe. But not a single dispatch from a staff correspondent.

In fact, the weekly tabloid has no reporters. Global's news gathering depends instead on a bank of short-wave radio receivers tuned to government broadcasts of 35 nations, monitored and recorded 24 hours a day.

Aided by sophisticated scanning devices and timers that automatically tune in to news broadcasts from cities around the world, the monitors and recorders collect news and editorial opinions which are then published verbatim.

Tapes of the broadcasts are transcribed by a small staff of typists and handed to the editors who decide which stories will be used. The idea, according to publisher Robin Hall, is to present news as it is reported by various countries around the world — complete with each nation's individual interpretation.

Distributed free to passengers aboard major international flights, Global is aimed at the truly sophisticated traveler, the internationalist — people who do business and travel," Hall says. It is paid for by the airlines and advertising executives.

Hall, a former advertising copywriter and account executive, developed the concept with Brian Nolan, an award-winning journalist formerly with the Canadian and American broadcasting corporations.

"The whole concept was his, really," Hall says of Nolan, who is now Global's vice-president and managing editor. "Brian was in Athens, Greece during the military takeover, and began monitoring other countries' short-wave radio broadcasts."

During his search for news in the midst of political upheaval, Hall says, Nolan discovered that every country in the world has an English-language news broadcast. The Global News concept began to germinate.

Hall and Nolan decided there might be a market for a publication based on reports from countries at the center of world events.

In addition to news stories, Global carries theater and cultural reviews, stock market analyses, sports reports and photographs of major events.

Two airlines — Air Canada and the Spanish Iberia — already have signed contracts with Global, and negotiations with other major carriers are continuing. The newspaper also will be available in international hotels and by subscription, giving it a total sales potential of up to 300,000 copies per week, according to Hall.

"I've got to believe there are 50,000 to 60,000 people in a world of three billion to whom this is going to appeal," Hall says. "It's a pretty prescient and altruistic dream, but we want to make something worthwhile out of this, and perhaps have an impact on world journalism."

Science Hyperactivity and additives today

By AL ROSSITER JR.
UPI Science Editor
WASHINGTON (UPI) - Three recently completed studies have cast some doubt on the much-publicized theory that food additives contribute to hyperactivity in children.
The studies, however, did not entirely refute the theory. They showed that the problem is more subtle and complex than researchers anticipated.
But a Nutrition Foundation advisory committee headed by Dr. Morris Lipton, professor of psychiatry at the University of North Carolina, concluded on the basis of the research completed so far that major changes in food manufacture or labeling "appear unnecessary and certainly premature."

Theorized link
The theorized link between additives such as food colors and flavors and hyperactivity was first proposed by Dr. Benjamin Feingold, a pediatric allergist at the Kaiser-Permanente Medical Center in San Francisco in 1973.
Feingold, who wrote a book on the subject, developed a diet which eliminated additives. He claimed it effectively treated nearly half the children under his care for hyperactive behavioral problems such as short attention span and impulsive actions.
"These children are in constant motion, going from one thing to another without completing a task," said Dr. Raymond Chun, a neurologist who participated in one of the studies at the University of Wisconsin.

Diets compared
In the Wisconsin study, 46 hyperactive children were observed for eight weeks by their parents, teachers and doctors to see if the Feingold diet or a test diet containing additives caused any changes in behavior. The diets were disguised so neither the children nor the observers knew who was getting what.
The three-year study found very few children for whom the additive-free diet was helpful and the researchers concluded additives were not to blame for hyperactivity except, possibly, in occasional cases.
The Wisconsin study was financed in part by the Food and Drug Administration and the Nutrition Foundation which receives about half its funds from the food industry.
Pittsburgh study
A study at the University of Pittsburgh, supported by the National Institute of Education and the Nutrition Foundation, found that children receiving diets containing food additives had brief periods of short attention spans and distractibility while those on additive-free diets did not.

Lipton said in a report to the Nutrition Foundation that this phenomenon needs further study.
The third study was conducted at the University of Western Ontario with Canadian government support. It studied food additives together with drugs used to treat hyperactive children.
Minimal effects of diets were observed by parents, but teachers who also participated as observers reported the children's behavior was worse when they ate cookies with artificial food colors than when they ate additive-free cookies.
Issue unresolved
On the basis of all three studies, Lipton and the advisory committee's vice chairman, Dr. Esther Wender of the University of Utah Medical Center said "the evidence available so far generally refutes Dr. Feingold's claim."
"On the other hand, one cannot yet be certain that food additives are utterly devoid of adverse effects in all children of all ages."
Lipton and Dr. Wender said several new studies have been started and their results should help resolve the matter.

Bible school to begin on Monday

A five-day Bible School will be conducted from Monday through Friday at Trinity Covenant Church, 302 Hackmatack St. The program will be held daily from 9 a.m. to noon. It will be open to children in Manchester and surrounding area between the ages of kindergarten and those entering Grade 6 in September.
The theme will be "10-4, God's Message Received and Understood." The program will include Bible stories, crafts, songs, refreshments and a missionary project.
To aid in the preparation of classes and refreshments, advance registration is requested and may be made by calling the church at 649-2855, or Mrs. Pat Anderson at 649-3639.

New Hampshire Music Festival had a very humble beginning

CENTER HARBOR, N.H. (UPI) - Once upon a time a New York pianist lived on an island in Lake Winnepesaukee every summer and invited friends up to provide a background orchestra for her students.
Madame Hedy Spielter needed an audience, too, so she invited the townspeople to get in their boats and cruise over.
It would take most of the boats on the 40-mile long lake these days to accommodate the 15,000 people who turn out year-round to hear the group which grew into the New Hampshire Music Festival.

Demand grew
Madame Spielter's concerts began in 1952 and promptly drew the attention of people across the lake in Laconia and Gifford, who decided they wanted music, too. They incorporated in 1953 as a nonprofit group to support the then-amateur musicians and began running concerts at Brewster Academy in Wolfeboro and at the Gunstock Recreation Area in Gifford.
"It was very much a vacation for musicians. It was not professional and it was not paid and they had no home base in those early days," festival manager Brenda Born said.

California in San Diego, took over the baton 16 years ago. He is wielding it still, over an orchestra of 34 professional musicians and a community chorus of 150 singers from 25 towns around the Lakes Region.
Miss Born said pay for the orchestra isn't New York scale, but "we give them free room and board - it is a vacation as well as a chance to play good music with people they've played with before. A lot of the same people return year after year."
Still going strong
One of the early soloists, Joel Johnson of Minneapolis, directs the chorus, whose members include high school and college students, storekeepers, doctors, accountants, school board members, homemakers and ladies in their 70s, still singing strong.
Every year the chorus tackles a major work and performs it with the orchestra during the regular concert series. This year it is working on Mozart's "Credo" mass. Two years ago it gave a moving rendition of Haydn's "The Creation."

Many directors
The orchestra went through a succession of directors. Then Thomas Nee, chairman of the music department at the University of car washes, bake sales and a Fourth of July chicken barbecue.

Its home base now is Plymouth College, where in conjunction with the music department, it offers choral and keyboard workshops each summer.

Governor Grasso signs nursing home care bills

HARTFORD (UPI) - Gov. Ella T. Grasso Tuesday signed major portions of her nursing home reform program and two bills setting up formulas to distribute state education aid.
The nursing home bills are the outgrowth of a special commission she appointed headed by William Ratchford of Danbury, who was subsequently named state commissioner of aging.
The legislation creates a nursing home ombudsman's office to handle complaints the elderly are being abused. It also requires certain health professions to report suspected cases of abuse to the ombudsman.
Another bill requires the Commission on Hospitals and Health Care and the state Health Department to license all home health care agencies effective Jan. 1, 1979.

Mrs. Grasso made improving the lot of the state's senior citizens a major effort of her legislative program this year. She has already signed other parts of the program.
Other bills signed Tuesday by her that help the elderly:
-Provide $1 million in bonded borrowing for pilot housing programs for the elderly in so-called semi-independent residential settings;
-Allow the Department of Aging and the Social Services Department to initiate action to protect the elderly as of Jan. 1, if cases of abuse are discovered.

Delegates attend NEA parley

Delegates from Manchester and its area were among those from Connecticut who attended the annual meeting last week in Minneapolis of the National Education Association (NEA).
Twenty-six of the state delegates represented the Connecticut Education Association and 122 represented local education associations from throughout the state.
Attending from Manchester were Arthur Glaeser, Roselle Schultz and Mary Sullivan.

Those attending from area towns were as follows: East Hartford - Elaine Case, Jean McEvers and Walter Willett; Glastonbury - Jean Huhn; Vernon - Jane Lamb and Roberta Meyers.
Florence M. Karpelman of Waterbury was installed as the new CEA president for one year.

Seniors suffer under status quo

When we senior citizens were young, the United States was truly a land of opportunity. The words "free enterprise" really described the economic system. A poor boy could become rich in a Horatio Alger. During most of the first half of this century, native-born Americans dared to leave their jobs and strike out on their own, as small businessmen, artists and small farmers.
Alas, a great many of these private businesses failed to survive the Depression, or were bought up by larger firms. By the end of World War II, the significant areas of the economy were in the hands of the big corporations. Large chains took over retailing. Big department stores put the "momma and poppa" food and specialty stores out of business.
Mergers brought together the basic sectors of production from steel to transportation to public utilities. Agri-business reduced the number of family farms. The "free enterprise" system, as we knew it, was frayed around the edges. The concept of competition was eroded. Product quality declined. Prices were set or "administered" by the dominant corporation in the critical areas in which life and comfort were sustained.

vices by reducing the money allotted to social projects.
When, for example, Lockheed Aircraft was in financial straits, a loan was forthcoming. New York City, in similar trouble, was helped only on condition that social services would be cut. Education, police protection, medical facilities and other "people" assistance was reduced.
Senior activists believe that the business of government is people, not business, not profit. This is the opposite of conservatism, as expressed by Calvin Coolidge's line, "the business of America is business." Ours is not essentially a political position. Partisan politics is not our concern. Both major parties carry out the mandates of people as expressed through the elected administration and the Congress. What moves us is the humanity or lack of humanity of elected officials.
A tilt toward conservative thinking costs us dearly. The majority of elder citizens are poor. We live on fixed incomes. Social-minded government pushes toward more help to make life safer, more comfortable, more dignified for seniors. Conservative government gives us as little as possible.
It is clear that under conservative political dominance the drive for profit demands sacrifice by people. We older Americans are no longer permitted to work. We do not contribute by our labor to the making of profit by the corporations. Services to the aging are therefore considered a threat to the free enterprise system. When we claim credit for our years of work before retirement, we are asked, "What have you done for us lately?" Logic demands that older Americans stop thinking and voting as conservatives.
Of course, if you don't agree, it's your privilege to disregard this column. Don't bother to read it.

Wetland map nearly ready for approval

By SHEILA TULLER

Herald Correspondent
After hearing citizen input at two public hearings, the 1977 inland wetlands map is ready for formal acceptance by East Hartford's Inland Wetlands Commission. The map will replace a 25-year-old wetlands map.

Tuesday night, Ken MacGregor of the Cosmis Corp. of Glastonbury, developer of the map, reported to the commission on the review of three parcels.

The owners of the parcels objected to the wetlands designations at the June 29 public hearing. At that time, commission chairman Henry Genga requested reinspection of the parcels.

Of the three parcels, only one has been reclassified. The Joseph Schultz property on Main St. was originally misclassified. MacGregor, Schultz, and a soil scientist walked the property recently. MacGregor said

Schultz was right when he said the land should not be considered wetlands.

"There's never been a puddle on this land, not even in the floods of 1936 and '38 when the rest of East Hartford was inundated," Schultz told the commission June 29.

The property of Harold Powell, Prospect St., and a piece of land near the river on N. Main St. owned by Alfred Burnham were also reviewed. However, MacGregor said, "After reinspection, no changes were made."

Additional objections to wetlands designations were made at Tuesday night's meeting.

Harry Ravelese, owner of land on Burnside Ave. at the Short Reach, fears the wetlands label will affect sale of the land. He said a potential buyer would like to put a miniature golf course and driving range on the property.

He feels the land is wet because of drainage problems. MacGregor reaffirmed it is the soil content that designates land wetland or not.

George Hannon Sr. of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., questioned the commission concerning a parcel of land he owns on Prospect St. near the railroad crossing.

Hannon also feels the wetland designation could hurt sale of the property.

The maps are now ready for final draft. MacGregor said he will have the finished product Aug. 9 for the Inland Wetlands Commission meeting.

MacGregor will take a few of the 48 maps from the Town Hall at a time.

"Even though we've gone beyond statutory requirements, the maps can still be available for public inspection this way," Town Engineer Chuck Sheehan said.

The commission agreed with Commissioner Michael Marin when he complimented MacGregor for doing a fine job.

"When complete, it will be a job we'll all be proud of," Marin said.

New panel replaces college commission

HARTFORD (UPI) — Gov. Ella T. Grasso has signed legislation creating a strong central board to oversee public higher education in Connecticut.

The legislation, signed Tuesday, ends three years of wrangling between lawmakers and the higher education community over how to oversee public universities and colleges.

The new 20-member Connecticut Board of Higher Education will replace the 17-member Commission on Higher Education, which has been criticized for years as being weak and inefficient.

The new board is composed of a majority of public members not associated with any higher education units.

Despite being given expanded powers available to the CHE, the new board's authority was watered down somewhat in its journey through the legislative process to satisfy lawmakers with ties to higher education.

The new board will be given extensive power to design a comprehensive budget for the 21 public college-level institutions and develop a set of statewide educational goals. The board will also have the power to approve or veto tuition increases.

In the past, the four levels of higher education — the University of Connecticut, the state colleges, the community colleges and the vocational technical colleges — have taken their budget requests directly to the legislature and bypassed the commission.

It is hoped the powers given the new panel will stop that.

The new law was touted by its legislative supporters as a cost-saver because the board will supposedly screen capital expenditure requests and eliminate duplication of educational services.

The new board is also required to come up with an internal reorganization plan for higher education.

Other measures signed by the governor:

— Allocate $30,000 to Meriden and $40,000 to Waterbury for mobile health vans and $25,000 to West Haven for a pilot day care project for the elderly.

— Provide a cost-of-living allowance of no more than three per cent depending on changes in the consumer price index for those persons in the Municipal Employees Retirement Fund.

2 men face rape charge

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (UPI) — Two Connecticut men charged with slaying two Lewisboro, N.Y., housewives in early March now face additional charges of raping one of the women.

Westchester County District Attorney Carl Vergari said Tuesday a county grand jury handed up a new indictment accusing Samuel Ayala, 26, and Willie Profit, 35, both of Norwalk, Conn., with raping Sheila Watson in her home.

Mrs. Watson and a friend, Bonnie Minter, were slain in the bedroom of the home on Rt. 123 in Lewisboro March 2 during a burglary. Their young children, who were in the home at the time, were unharmed.

Ayala and Profit were indicted previously on various murder and burglary charges in connection with the deaths, but the rape charge was not included in that indictment. A third defendant was not charged with rape.

Senators say Bagley insulted their work

By BARBARA RICHMOND
Herald Reporter

"A gratuitous insult to the members of the Joint Committee on Appropriations," is the way State Sen. Robert Houley and John G. Groppo describe comments made by Roger B. Bagley, chairman of the Board of Trustees of Regional Community Colleges.

In a letter to Groppo, House chairman of the committee, Bagley expressed great disappointment with the level of funding that was provided for the community colleges.

Houley is Senate chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

In the reply to Bagley, the two legislators said the Appropriations Committee and the General Assembly were not without their struggles, difficulties and disappointments, "not made easier, we might add, by higher education collective bargaining agreements and board-approved salary increases for central office staff and college administrators."

"Difficult decisions are and will continue to be an inherent part of our state government. Those without the stomach to make difficult decisions might better expend their efforts in other fields," they said.

They also admitted that the Appropriations Committee was not completely pleased with all aspects of the adopted budget and noted they made difficult decisions within priorities in keeping with the best interests of the people of the state.

"So please spare us and the people of Connecticut, who have seen the community colleges budget grow from $3.8 million in 1967 to more than $22 million this year, the impression that this legislature has forced you to the brink of disaster," Houley and Groppo said.

They added, "The challenges you face, the difficult decisions you must reach are what you and your associates on the board are there for...if the state had unlimited resources to be applied to all things good and desirable there would be no need for an Appropriations Committee and no need for a Board of Trustees for Community Colleges."

"We aren't perfect, perhaps not even good, but we do our best. We trust the board will do likewise," they told Bagley.

Bagley complained that the board had proposed a budget for 1977-78 which was designed to serve 20,000 full-time equivalent students. The governor only proposed to accommodate 19,000 and the General Assembly reduced her recommendation to a level which makes it impossible to serve more than the current level of 17,700.

Police report

Four Glastonbury youths were charged Tuesday night with third-degree assault in connection with a complaint by three East Hartford teenagers.

Police said the alleged incident started in Glastonbury when the car in which the East Hartford youths were riding was followed by one in which the Glastonbury youths were riding.

When they got into East Hartford the youths from that town stopped to call the police and when they came out the car took off.

Charged were Joseph S. Bramanti, 16, of 296 Williams St.; James J. Bunk, 22, of 59 Risley Rd.; Edmund T. Weir, 21, of 548 Manchester Rd., and George E. Hall, 19, of 84 Ledgewood Dr.
