Blackmore, the novelist, has written to the London Times to say that fruit growing in England does not pay.

The standing army of the United States is not larger than when the population was only one-half its present number.

The time is coming, predicts the New York Advertiser, when, by methods already foreseen, we shall store and make use of the heat of the sun.

The American Federation of Labor is now encouraging women to organize under their trades union system. It is not so many years ago, recalls Public Opinion, that the trades unions sought to maintain an embargo against women.

There are no idols in the Shinto temples of Japan. Antichrist consists of the worship of ancestors and the powers of nature, the sun especially. The only objects in the temples are a small mirror, emblematic of light, some strips of white paper. Pilgrimages to various places part a feast of this religion.

A law has just gone into force in Washington, D. C., prohibiting any building over 110 feet in height, or any street or over ninety feet high on other streets. This action was taken when it was found that the upper stories of a new flat building 100 high could not be reached by any engine or series of ladders in the city.

While cottonized has been found to cattle for many years it is only within ten years that the hula has been utilized in that way. Long after cottonized oil became an important article of commerce the hula continued to be burned. It is stated that a number of Mohammedan missionaries are about to be dispatched to Africa at the Sultan's private expense to convert the Africans and thus create a barrier to the spread of European power in the dark continent. The Atlanta Constitution observes "The recent discharge of a large number of clerks in the departments at Washington has disappointed and possibly ruined many bright men and women who indulged the hope that they would remain in the service of the government for years to come. It is to be regretted that so many youngsters of ability seek these Washington clerkships. Such positions are a decision of the matter. As a rule they do not pay very well, and their routine work in a short time makes the clerks unfit for other positions. A government clerk who is outside of the civil service grade has no certainty of keeping his job. He has to spend every cent of his salary for living expenses, and the chances are that he will go in debt. In Washington the clerk who gets $9 a year tries to run with the $2,000 salary, who in turn seeks the companionship of the $1,800 clerk, who is cultivating the society of a $3,000 office holder. This way of living forces the clerks to spend more than they receive. They go to the clubs of the money-lenders and very few ever get on their feet again and square accounts with the world. The departments at Washington send out more hopeless wrecks than any other place in the whole country. A strong-minded young man may get through at night, but nine men out of ten who hold government clerkship five years and then lose it sink into the mire of poverty or despondency. It is a rare thing for them to pick themselves up and make a new start in life. The bright young fellow who has a government clerkship should be glad to get a good day's work for himself by letting it alone.

At 7:50 Wednesday evening M. S. Chapman called the republican caucus to order and James W. Cheney was chosen as chairman. He accepted the position with a brief expression of opinion.

Wm. Foulds moved to proceed to an informal ballot for Dr. F. H. Whitton for first representative. This ally of wit brought forth great laughter, and when the name of the general doctor was mentioned, the motion was voted down.

W. B. Cheney placed the name of W. C. Cheney before the caucus for first representative, as being a friend of workmen, and if elected would look out for their interests.

George Hutchison gave formal notice that whoever received the nomination for representative would be called upon to pledge himself to the support of the weekly payment and factoring laws as provided in use under the penalty of losing the votes of the republican workmen.

Hugh Moriarty, as a republican and workman, did not believe in pledging representatives to any party. He should use his own judgment. He held that the law was wrong, and that if he was representative he would vote as our representatives in the last house did.

M. S. Chapman held that workmen should know how their representatives stood on these questions, that they have a right to ask and to know.

On the informal ballot 234 votes were cast, Dr. F. H. Whitton 87, George W. Ferris 13, George Hutchison 6.

W. C. Cheney's nomination was made formal and unanimous, and he was called upon for a speech. He thanked the caucus for the honor conferred, said he appreciated it fully, to a party that had so many great men among its members, both in the past and present and looked out so well for the interests of workmen.

J. D. Henderson, in a neat speech, placed the name of George W. Ferris in nomination for second representative. On the informal ballot 223 votes were cast, which Dr. F. H. Whitton received 270, J. D. Henderson 28, George W. Ferris 24.

The nomination of Dr. Whitton was made formal and unanimous and he was called upon for an address. He said his colleague made a speech good enough for both. That his republicanism extended from one end of this country to the other and even out into the Pacific ocean to Honolulu, and that if another democratic president was elected who would try to place a green upon the throne, he should be buried so deep with ballots that he could never rise again.

John S. Cheney then presented the name of Olin R. Wood for judge of probate and urged his nomination and election with all the earnestness at his command, said that Mr. Wood was an expert when he stated that Mr. Wood's charge for probate work were not exorbitant, that the law regulated the charges, and no judge of probate could exceed the limits set, that Mr. Wood was an expert and experienced and he hoped he would be chosen as judge of probate for many years to come.

N. T. Puffer seconded the nomination and said he definitely voted for Mr. Cheney had said on the subject.

On the informal ballot Olin R. Wood received 175 out of a total vote of 327 and Herbert O. Bowers 151. Mr. Bowers then moved that Mr. Wood's nomination be made formal and unanimous.

At this juncture nearly one half of the voters present left the hall.

The following nominations for justice of the peace were then made; by acclamation: Olin R. Wood, Charles S. Cheney, Herbert O. Bowers, Charles R. Hathaway, Wm. B. Covill, Sanford M. Benton and Charles E. House. No further business appearing the caucus dissolved, at 9:30 o'clock.

Forty hours in St. James. The devotion known as the Forty Hours opened in St. James church last Sunday morning immediately following the high mass.

The church was well filled, many persons not members being present and they witnessed a very pretty ceremony. The family school children, boys and girls, marched in procession, encircling the interior of the church, headed by two acolytes carrying lighted tapers and followed by a half dozen very small girls who were clothed in white and strewed the aisles immediately in front of the most blessed sacrament, carried in solemn procession by Father McElroy, the celebrant, assisted by Father Kelly, who carried the consecrated host going before and spreading sweet incense along the way.

The young ladies composing the society of the Children of Mary were in the procession.

The choir, under the leadership of Professor Wm. M. Keating furnished inspiring music.

The altar was ornamented most handsomely for the occasion, but this appearance was not the only thing that attracted attention. The young ladies composing the society of the Children of Mary were in the procession.

ought to have been a forgotten will, or a will that at the very least, it's a hanging, that old chest!

THE OLD OAK CHEST.

It was quite a new experience to Doty, this housekeeping business. She had theorized a good deal about "Handy Housekeepers," "Comprehensive Cook Books" and "Home Guides," but she never had any practical experience before.

"I'm, child," said Aunt Themia, "you don't know nothin' about cookin'!" "But indeed I do!" asserted Doty. "I can make a chicken fricassee as well as you, Aunt Themia."

"Well, I'll take care!" said Doty, with the reckless audacity of ignorance. "Everything shall be quite right. You'll see, Aunt Themia."

"And after the old lady had departed, with many misgivings, Doty drew a long breath of rapture, and executed as impromptu dance in the middle of the kitchen floor his earthly step."

to kick," said Doty, with a little gasping breath, "Add swear. I know he was all right."

"I should think so!" said Reuben, with a lowering brow. "How did the villain get in, Dotty?" "I—I left all the doors open," confessed Dotty, with a conscience-stricken air.

"No!" she said, shortly. "Go away!" "Don't be hard on a poor fellow, miss!" whined the man. And Dotty was quite certain that she saw the spot of Aunt Themia's old silver crown just protruding from the top of the old oak chest.

"There are some old garments in that big chest," said she. "You may look at them. Perhaps they will be what you want."

"The burglar!" said Dotty. "He's in the old chest up stairs. I tipped him into it. And I was so afraid I afterward that he would attempt to die, because he was so still for a while or two. But when he began to kick," said Doty, with a little gasping breath, "Add swear. I know he was all right."
