A Central Pacific Railway land agent says there are more than 200,000 head of wild horses in Nevada. They are a source of much trouble and loss to the ranchmen who try to get off the best grass on the ranges and leave little for cattle and sheep. The last Legislature passed a law permitting any one to shoot stallions found running wild.

A remarkable trial has just ended at Bochrest. Two boys, one six years and the other 14, were charged upon their own confession with attempting to drown a child two years old. Their defense was that the long drought had to be terminated, and that the crime for which they were on trial was the only successful method known to accomplish that end. An explanation of this curious defense is that the children of the villages in times of great drought are made to throw the clay figure of a child into the water. The boys threw in the child merely because they had no younger.

The New York Courier observes: We have had a tulip mania and a Snake bite mania, and now we have a bicycle mania. The bicycle mania is not a fit of hysteria, and pretty soon hysteria become fashionable and everybody had them. In these latter days the bicycle throws its magic spell over us, and we become eccentrics. We talk about riding a hundred miles a day and doing it without fatigue, and we are told that the calves of the legs become a special treat looking at, and the lungs—oh, the lungs resemble a pair of blacksmith's bellows. Physicians have themselves caught the disease, and that makes the matter very serious. Now we shall see on the road the fat and the lean, the handsome and the ugly, grave philosophers taking the lead, and their families, servants, girls and butlers and all, bringing up the rear. It will be a spectacle for gods and men. Well, it is a good thing—a glorious thing for the country. It gets us out of doors where there is plenty of good air to breathe. It gives us a terrific appetite and rosy cheeks, makes us good natured, and keeps us young. Let the bicycle prevail.

In Philadelphia a Chinese grave diggers' strike has occurred, notes the New York Post. In its general features, it resembles the American variety, but the contractor who is at odds with the strikers complains that they have no notion of the sacredness of an agreement. He hinted twice to disinter the bodies of thirteen of their countrymen for removal to China, having made with the mayor of Chinatown a contract to do the work at a lump sum. The amount of it probably came to the ears of the digging Chinamen, for after a few hours' work they threw down their shovels, retired to the shanty where they had their huts, and hoisted above it a pink parasol. The contractor learned that this signal meant that they had "gone out on strike." He reasoned with them through an interpreter, and they made a compact to finish their grave-making for a substantial increase in their pay. Taking up their shovels, they worked industriously all through the night with the aid of lanterns. The next day their labor came to a sudden stop again, they retired and the pink parasol reappeared. The perplexed contractor recalled the interpreter, who announced that his countrymen thought that a "pink parasol" was a bad omen, and insisted on its being "blacked." The contractor says they still "will not work" until the parasol is blacked.
