The great work of botling a large portion of the power which has been for thousands of years lost in Niagara Falls has practically ended and soon an immense current of electricity will be driving wheels many miles away from the Falls. Ten years ago the person who intimated that such a thing might be was booted and ridiculed for imagining that there could be miracles at this late day. Only a short time ago it was imagined hat the sun was kept full of light and heat by means of comets and stars continually dropping into it. Now science has made known the fact that such is not the case. - Philadelphia

In the palace of wicked Jeroboam there is a sick child—a very sick child. Medicines have failed; skill is exhausted. Young Abijan, the prince, has lived long enough to become very popular, and yet he must die unless some supernatural aid be afforded. Death comes up the broadstairs of the palace and swings back the door of the sickroom of royalty and stands looking at the dying prince with the dart uplifted. Wicked Jeroboam knows that he has no right to ask anything of the Lord in the way of kindness. He knows that his prayers would not be answered, and so he sends his wife on the delicate and render mission to the prophet of the Lord in Shiloh. Putting aside her royal stitre, she puts on the garb of a peasant woman and starts on the road. Instead of carrying gold and gems as she might have carried from the palace she carries only those gifts which seem to indicate that she belongs to the peasantry—a lew loaves of bread and a few cracknels and a cruse of honey.
