ature and music. They devoted their entire time to the farms for the first few years after they assumed the management, and now the land yields twice as much as it did at the time of their father's death. Corn is their principal product, and the avrage yield is 60 tushels an acre. They have drained a lake of 400 acres by digging a ditch a mile and a balf long. he farms are divided into small sections, which are tilled by tenants with whem they divide the crops. These women ride 30 and 40 miles a day on their tours of inspection, which are not at stated times, so the tenants have no way of knowing when they are coming. Miss Nina Gillett says there is no work she would prefer to farming and thinks a woman who has a knowledge of the subject and some experience is just as good a farmer as a man. Por several years the story has been extensively circulated that the natives of Alaska are sequainted with living mammoths. The probable origin of the story was pointed out at a recent meeting of the Biological Society of Washington by Mr. C. H. Townsend. In 1885 when he was in Alaska, some of the natives questioned him concerning the nature of the giant animal whose bones are not infrequently found there, and he drew restorations of the mammoth in order to show them how it looked when living. They were greatly interested in the pictures, and made copies of them. These copies, he thinks, have been widely scattered through Alaska, and, being found by white men in the hands of the natives, have given rise to the belief that the prehistoric beasts still unhabit that

Good Looks.

There are more wrinkles in the face of a baby monkey than there are in that of an old baboon. And speaking of wrinkles, more of them can be wrought out in a fair young face by neuralgia than will be found in that of an aged person. Constant pain will shrivel, and neuralgia neglected will plow a furrows deep. It not only wrinkles, but takes the bloom away and gives the skin a dull and yellow look. St. Jacobs Oil is a prompt and sure oure for neuralgia, and it should be used, as while it soothes and cures, t smooths out the tracks of pain and leaves e skin healthy and fair again; besides it rids the sufferer of much torment and restores a happier disposition.
