A LOST MOONSTONE.

BY ELEANOR W. F. BATES.

It was a large, bare room, white-washed once, but now cobwebby to the ceiling and dingy as to the walls...

"Oh, don't shut out that lovely sunlight!" cried a fresh young voice. "You'll blind yourself some day, and then you'll know how good it is," replied the unrelenting foreman.

"I'll send up Peter," said Mr. Chester. "Here's an order for six shirts. They must be just right and made by hand. The eyelike holes must be bigger than common to accommodate the customer's ankles. He left it for me to-day, and hand it to me when you go home. Look out for it."

"The patentee and manufacturer of Chester's Superior Shirts disappeared, and Miss Hall held up the gem and looked at it. Two or three girls left their seats and came, with sewing dangling over their hands, to inspect the stud. It was a really beautiful moonstone of unusual size and luster, set in the narrow rim of gold.

"I've heard that the stones are costly things," said Miss Hall. "Go back to your work, girls, and don't idle any longer."

"She glanced again at the pearly tints of the moonstone, and carefully dropped it into the lower depths of her "business pocket," as she designated a small bag which hung from her waist.

"At the extreme end of the room sat two young women. One was a new hand, who had propositioned Miss Hall by a sample of exquisite needlework. Her name was Floretta Simpson; the other, Dolly Barry, was older, and had been in Mr. Chester's employ ever since he had patented his handsome shirts, which, from the unvarying excellence of their manufacture, were fast making his fortune. She was now initiating Floretta into certain technicalities. They had to change their seats, for Peter, general utility man, now appeared and draped a white cloth across the sunny skylight, to the darkening of the corner where the girls had placed themselves.

"I don't know about that," resolutely answered Miss Hall. She walked over to the speaking tube. "Peter," she called, "ask Mr. Chester to come up here."

"Here's that horrid old moonstone Peter says you're all making such a fuss about!" she cried. "I fastened it to my watch-chain to see how it would look as a pendant and write it home and forget all about it till you're all gone."

"What about this stud?" said he brusquely. "Don't you think you could find it by hunting a little longer?"

"I haven't it," said Floretta; "I don't know where it is. I thought Miss Hall came and took it after I got through measuring."

"I hope I shall find it," she said, wistfully. "I never worked away from home before, and you don't know how beautiful I felt when I first came in, and all you girls looked at me."

"Oh, pretty well; not so well as you and I," answered Dolly, coolly. "I can't have so much more here," said Miss Hall, raising her voice.

"Will you turn your pocket inside out?" asked Mr. Chester. "Not unless all the other girls do and Miss Hall, too," replied Floretta, indignantly.

"The girls who had been out to dinner returned. Gramus were brushed up, the oil stove extinguished, hands washed and work resumed. Floretta's declining eyes prevented much progress, and Miss Hall suddenly took away her work and gave it to another sewer. Dolly Barry could no longer resist the impulse that made her slip into a sea-bath Floretta and say sympathetically, "Don't feel bad about it. Of course it's found here somewhere. I'm going to look again as soon as I've finished this tuck."

"Where on it? We've looked everywhere," cried Floretta sadly. "Do you want me to search for it to the telephone and rung up my wife, who by this time had reached home, and this is what Peter heard:

Leaders of French Society Perish in a Frightful Disaster.

Paris, France (By Cable).—Not since the terrible fire which converted the festivities in connection with the marriage of Emperor Napoleon to Archduchess Marie Louise into an epoch of grief and mourning has so appalling a disaster overtaken Parisian society as the conflagration of the Rue Jean Goussier Tuesday afternoon.

But Jack got into bad habits and had to be killed. He had all the apples, potatoes, turnips and carrots that he could possibly want to eat, but he wasn't satisfied. So he began to gnaw the bark from trees and shrubs in the front lawn. He was whipped for it time and again, but after he had raised a valuable pear tree in a garden he was shot for his disobedience.—Chicago Record.

"I'm willing," said Henry. "It will be a long time before I can get a job in school, where we have to work so hard. With our teacher, we have always to know our lessons, to do all our tasks properly, to keep our books clean, and ourselves also; and I like to hunt for nests with you much better. Come, let us go quickly, and no one will see us."

Both started off into the woods without being seen either by their parents or their teacher; but they forgot that nothing is ever hidden from God.

They amused themselves climbing up first one tree and then another, and explored two nests, in which they found several little birds two or three days old.

They were overcome with heavy clouds, the thunder rolled in the distance, and the rain began to fall in drops.

When the blind seer supposed you had been born blind, and after living many years shut out from the beautiful things of the world, one of the first things he saw at the window was a flock of sparrows. "What are they?" asked the physician.

"I think they are teacups," was the reply. "A watch was then shown to him, and he knew what it was, probably because he heard it tick. Later, on seeing the flame of a lamp, he tried to pick it up, not having the slightest idea of its nature.—Chicago Record.

It isn't always safe to count on the timidity of a creature that is proverbially timid. Jack, a big, white, lop-eared rabbit, with pink eyes, was one of these exceptions.

Longest Distance Seen by the Eye. The longest distance ever encompassed by the human vision, so far as the records go, is 130 miles, between the Umatilla and the Snake rivers in Idaho.

Between the other two peaks communication has been continuous for an hour or more on several occasions. The Campana range is 14,300 feet in height, while Mount Elion is 13,400 feet. The longest distance that the human eye ever reached until this record was made was between Algiers and Spain, 163 miles.

She Coughed Up a Bullet. Amelia Franks, aged nine, who was shot by her father recently, and who has been hovering between life and death ever since, has coughed up the bullet fired into her body, and thereby saved her life.

The cough she had accomplished was so far from doing. Although all the skill of the surgeons at the hospital was given to the little sufferer, it was thought for a time that the bullet lodged in the little one's throat would cause her death.

The wound from which Amelia suffered is regarded by the medical fraternity as a peculiar one. The bullet entered at the middle of the chin and passed under the child's tongue, landing in the muscles near the windpipe. Probing was resorted to, but the missile was far out of reach, and the physicians were compelled to desist for fear of endangering the child's life.

The exact location of the bullet was unknown until Tuesday last, when a surgeon called in an expert dentist to make a plaster cast of the girl's mouth. The cast indicated that the ball had lodged near the root of the tongue. The physician deemed it dangerous and useless to probe further, but it was decided that unless the bullet was removed the child would die.

The girl was resting quietly one morning, when she was suddenly seized with a violent fit of coughing. After a few minutes this expectorating fit ceased. Immediately after coughing up the bullet, Amelia began to mend rapidly and probably will recover.—Philadelphia Press.

How Fair Maple Syrup is Made. The attention of the city amateur has been called to "Hick" imitation maple sires that are being sold on the market, and in some stores. It is "Hickian" maple, that is worked every year during the season of blackneck takes. A little maple sugar is used in making the imitation, and the peculiar flavor is given to it by means of hickory bark. It is said that only a small proportion of the so-called syrup retailed in the market is the genuine article. It is said that there are several of the "factories" now operating in the city. In some cases the imitation is so pure that it is very difficult to detect it.
