EYES NOT NECESSARY. Certain Creatures Enabled to See

Through Sensitive Skins. Eyes are popularly considered to be quite necessary to sight, but this is an error, if we are to believe Dr. Nagel, a recent German experimenter. Many creatures without eyes can see; at least they can distinguish perfectly well between light and darkness and even between different degrees of light. This is the lowest degree of seeing, to be sure, but still it is really sight, and differs scarcely more from the vision of some insects that possess eyes than this does from our own clear sight. Creatures that see without eyes see by means of their skins. All skins, savs Dr. Nagel, are potential eyes; that is, they are sensitive to light. In animals that have eves the sensitiveness has been highly localized and greatly increased -so that man, for instance, has a retina very sensitive to light, and an expanse of ordinary skin which possesses a sensitiveness to light so slight that it is hardly conscious of it. Yet his skin is sensitive in some degree, as it is proved by the fact that it sunburns - that is, light may cause a disturbance in the pigment of the skin just as it does in that of the eye. In the eye the disturbance is accompanied by a nervous change, which sends a telegraphic message along the optic nerve to the brain. In the skin, too, there are nerves, and there are messages also, but their tidings imprint no image on the mind; they simply express discomfort-cry out

But in many eyeless creatures the lack of eyes is in part made up by increased sensitiveness of the whole skin surface to light. Darwin long ago noticed that earthworms, although they have no eyes, will sud lenly withdraw into their holes at the approach of a lighted candle. Some creatures seem most sensitive to sudden diminution. If a number of oysters, kept in a vessel together, are found to be open, they will shut all at once if a dark bject comes between them and the light. Another bivalve, called psammodia, has long, whitish transparent tubes which protude from the sand in which it lies buried. If these are suddenly illuminated they contract, and the brighter the light the greater the contraction. If a number of them be carried into direct sunlight they hasten to bury themselves in the sand ; or, if there is no sand, they move restlessly to and fro in the water until they are exhausted, -Boston Journal.

Having avenged the assault upon Mrs. Seinske the lynchers went to their homes. The body was left in the cornfield, and about 5 o'clock p. m., a telephone message informed the Coroner that there was a case waiting him. No arrests have been made. nor is it likely that any will be made. Mrs. Seinska was badly injured in her struggles with her assailant, and is in a St. Patrick. serious condition. She is a comely woman under thirty. The tramp, who has not been identified, was apparently thirty-five years old. He had a dark mustache and wore a soft flannel shirt, dark clothing and a black siqueh hat. It is supposed that he was from Chicago.

KIDNAPPED CHILD FOUND.

Little John Conway Returned to His John Conway, the five-year-old boy of Albany, N. Y., who had been at the mercy of kidnappers since Monday morning, was returned to his parents shortly after $ o'clock Thursday through the efforts of the ploy of the Argus. The child was abducted by his uncle, Joseph Hardy, and a com-panion named H. G. Blake. The child was rescued from his captors in a dense wood near Karners, about eight miles west of Albany. Joseph M. Hardy. the boy's uncle, is accused of being the chief conspirator in the attempt to obtain the ransom at the risk of the child's life. To the cowardice of the boy's abductors alone is it due that he has been restored to
