Sermon to the Feminine Totlers.

There are two superficial and somewhat provident notions of kindness which overlook the truth of a law of kindness and higher the fulfilment of that law. The first is that kindness is a happy section of temperament. whose faithful service in troublous days earned for him the title of "The Patriotic Blacksmith." Early in the great struggle for independence, William Denning enlisted in the patriotic ranks. For some months he shared the hardships of Washington's army, crossing the Delaware on the memorable Christmas night of 1776, and meeting the foe at Princeton ten days later.

But Lieutenant Denning's most effective aid was a mendaged with the something amiable and desirable, perhaps, but rather ornamental than essential. Consequently many religious and devout people are unkind in words and actions without any feeling of sinfulness on that account. Put away the notion of kindness which regards it as merely an external grace of character or a useful lubricant wherewith to reduce the frictions of social intercourse and conceive it as an excessity in order to happiness, and that there is a strong probability that they will have to fight the battle of life alone, they own fortune, and their saw and ax and plane sharpened for its construction, since "Every wise woman buildeth her out learning some business at which he effective aid was rendered with the he not only fails of duty, but will be un-
