maker and annoyed the marksman. An expert gunmaker has invented a rifle that is intended to solve the problem, and, in the opinion of those who have tried it, it does so. It is modeled on a principle entirely new to gun making, the trigger being worked by the thumb and placed on top of the rifle, instead of underneath, where all 1214 triggers have been placed since guns were first made. A one-armed man can use this new rifle, the action is so simple and the mechanism so free

The rifle can be taken apart and put together in a few seconds, so few are the parts of which it is constructed. There are no screws except the one that joins the stock to the barrel. The simple remaining mechanism fits together without screws. The firing section of the gun consists of only five parts. The mechanism of the gun is as follows: When the hammer is drawn back to cock the gun the nose of a lever is pressed upward.
