ANGEL OF THE CONCHO.

A New York Girl Who Nursed the Mck Soldiers Coming Home From Santiago, Miss Adele Gardiner was apparently the angel of the Concho, which recently arrived at New York with its load of form deeds as heroic as any upon the battlefield. Without rest and assisted only by Miss Alice Babcock and Miss Petersen, she cared for 160 soldiers who were all of typhoid and malarial fevers. She prepared the dead for burial at sea and cried when the bodies were slipped geer the rail. Her interest in her duties

Women Comprising With Men. Belations of the sexes are being med-Bigd, says an English magazine, by the nesociation of men and women in study and sport. The genuine sportswoman sugram any concession on the ground of sex. If she is competing with men, it wast be on squal terms, and she will do her best, taking a beating if the fates so ordain, in a true sporting spirit. The same for log is also shown in the educational world. An examination was proceeding recently at one of the nedical schools, and tea was served aring the interval to the exammers. Two ladies who were awaiting the ordeal were asked to join in the refrashments. One accepted the courtesy with gratitude, but the other, more modern in her manner of thinking, declined because the men were not also
