DEATH'S FERRYMAN.

I am a ferryman, old and gray, And the river is deep and wide; And whose er crosses by night or by day never return, but forever and aye Must remain on the other side.

The waters are cold, and the current And the mists hang heavy and chill; And backward and forward they slowly drift, And prayers that their lives had With never a break, and they never lift, Though they seem to be never still.

The heavens are dark, and the course But my boat is staunch and true; And the waves are rough, but my arm b

And safely I ferry the ghostly throng

All are equal who cross with me, Vassal and king and bond and free, Peasant and noble of high degree, The maid and her lady fair.

The weary toller who longs for rest, Brave youth and manhood proud; The erring one with his sins confessed, The sinless babe on the mother's brea-

And the mother with sorrow bowed. Some on their journey set forth alone, With trembling and anxious fears; Some amid waiting, with sob-and moan, known. And heartbreak and bitter tears.

Man brought naught into the world save And naught can he take away: Naked was he when he first drew breath, nd naked will be when he goes with Death On his slient, mysterious way.

So all are equal when Death sets free, To cross to the distant strand; The king and vassal and bond and free, Whether of lowly or high degree, Must all cross the river of Death with me o enter that unknown land. -Dr. John A. Gilbert, in Cleveland Plain Dealer.
