COLONEL KENNEDY'S WILL.

THREE OF HIS NEPHEWS TO CONTEST HIS VALIDITY.

George A. Kennedy, Herbert Kennedy and Samuel E. Kennedy, of East Hartford, nephews of the late Col. Henry Kennedy, late of this city, have taken an appeal from the Hartford probate court, in admitting the will to probate.

The appeal is taken to the June return day of the superior court.

The mother of George and Herbert was left $5,000 under the will. None of the nephews was mentioned and the appeal was taken by them. The appeal from the probate court is largely of a formal nature, and the reasons of appeal will have to be filed until the case is in the superior court.

Hugh O'Fleahy, who has been the counsel for the executors since the will was offered for probate, will be associated with Judge Eggleston in defending the will, as the executors have retained Judge Eggleston for the purpose.

An Dr. Brongfeld, Jr., it is understood, has been retained by the contestants.

A good deal of interest is manifested in this matter here, as Mrs. Abigail of this place is a beneficiary by the will to the extent of over $10,000.

THE SONG OF THE PINES.

We are the mass of ships,
Garnished for centuries;
Storms and mountains-breeze
Tangle our hair and hats,
Kissed us with mother lips.

See how the tender and stern
Heavens have hidden us since,
Clinging to the hillsides—
Or stung in the faithful skies—
Lift up your heads and learn!

Hear how the Sun doth laugh,
"Climb ye sons, sons of mine!"
Soak your clothes in water,
Yours is the sunlight wine—
Take of my warmth and learn!

Come with our hard, the Wind,
Bring us the cold, the rain,
"Say, this is bright heat;
Singing and love and death,
These I left, far behind!"

—Josephine Preston Peabody, in Youth's Companion.

THE TRAMP'S KISS.

A wet, boisterous night. Along a rain-soaked road, with his hat pulled over his eyes, he plodded his way home. He had left the city two hours before, and its lights had disappeared with the oncoming of the storm.

The weary pedestrian suddenly passed by a man who was lying sick in his booth. "No! he was not mistaken; the light he had seen came from a cottage window—a cottage that stood just off the turnpike. Surely every heart did not beat uneasiness at the sight of the man's gaunt, gauntly figure, and his gauntly countenance?"

"Surely he was not doomed to die of starvation and fatigue in this Christian land!"

The grimy fingers closed tightly about the stick he was carrying upon the floor of his booth.

The sound of voices reached his ears as he stood for a moment irresolute. One was the deep, gruff voice of a man, and the other was that of a woman. He knocked gently upon the door, and when no answer came, he pushed it open. A wan, wan woman appeared. The wayfarer's eyes wandered from the cozy fire to the repast on the table before it and from thence to the ready face above him.

"Well, what d'ye want?" snapped the eager woman.

"A mouthful of food—I'm starving," replied the wayfarer.

"Food, eh? that's allays the cry," snarled the other. "Why don't you work for some as Ol' Do? Get away, or O'll set the dog on yer!" and the door was shut violently in the supplicant's face.

A lone man escaped his lips, he leaned heavily against the wall before the door. When at length he turned from the cottage and sought the open road a strange light had entered his sunken eyes—the light of despair.

"Well, what?" With a groan, words fell from his lips, an exultant laugh gurgled in his throat. "Hark! What was that? Something was approaching from behind."

"Ah! that something was a cyclone. He had been so long in the grip of the lamp and could hear the sucking sound of the fire on the wet road. The starving wretches stepped back beneath the shadow of a tree, and the small cyclone followed, with a picket post in the other's face.

"Great Scott, my man! where the dickens have you sprung from?" ejaculated the rider, a young fellow, as he dashed lightly from his machine, "I ain't got no job to go to, and I ain't got you or your mate, of us, would have been fitting subjects for surgical research by this!" and the speaker gave his broad shoulders a shake to dislodge the rain from his storm-dampened coat.

"I wanted you to stop," said the other, his words coming through his set teeth.

"Indeed, and for what reason?" interrogated the cyclone, trying to see the face of the wayfarer.

"I want—uh, and the knobby stick was lifted, undiscerned by the cyclist, a few inches from the ground.

"Help, did you say? Then you're on the right track?"

"Well, that is if you like, but—I'm starvin'!"

"Good heavens! Yes, now I see your face. I don't doubt it! Here, old chap, for goodness sake go and get something to eat," and the young fellow plucked his hand in his pocket.

It will be our year next Sunday since Father Chapman is gone. The pastor of St. James church as pastored his parishioners are highly pleased with the splendid progress that has been made in church matters during that period. Pastor and people are working harmoniously together for the general good and their united efforts are most gratifying to all concerned.

M. S. Chapman is sinking a 6-inch artesian well at his trout preserve on the estate at the foot of what is known as McLean Hill. On reaching a depth of 27 feet water was discovered to be 60 feet above the surface. The well is soft and exceedingly cool, and is as clear as crystal. In sinking the well they struck sandstone at a depth of 22 feet. The well is being sunk for the purpose of supplying Mr. Chapman's trout pasture. He will sink it as deep as may be found necessary in order to supply an abundance of water for the desired purpose.

A determined effort is being made in some of the near-by cities to suppress bicycle scouring. Two men were fined $15 and costs each in Hartford this week for this offense and three Hartford men were fined $5 each in New Britain this week for the same offense. These punishments should tend to measure the idleness and practice, and it is to be hoped that they will be productive of good results.

While the bicycle is a great business need for haste the bicycle can be made a great time saver to mankind, but its uses should not be converted into that impudent and needless practice commonly styled "Scorching," which endangers the lives and limbs of other wheel people, pedestrians, children, etc. It is high time a halt was called and the scourge applied.

The thirty-fourth annual reunion of the 21st Regiment Veteran Association will be held at Williamson, Conn., May 18, 1899.

Young maple trees were set out on the edges of the lawns of the Ninth district school yesterday. The trees sit the sidewalks, on Main and School streets, and are meant as a reminder, in part, that people should not walk on the lawns. It is too bad to have the grounds trampled down as they are. There is no need whatever of persons walking across those grounds and making foot paths as they do. One's sense of what is right and proper should be a sufficient protection to the property, and as Cheney Brothers are willing to trust to that sense of honor and right in the public, by leaving the trees standing, we trust that their good nature and trust in their neighbors should not be abused. Because a thing is right is a sufficient reason why it should be done. It is not a question of whether one can do those things without being punished. It is the eternal fitness of things that should be adopted as the standard.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

I wish to hereby inform my patrons and the general public, that after Saturday, May 6, 1899, my meat car will be withdrawn from the road for a period of about two months. I will go over the route however, in person, every morning early and take orders, which will be delivered promptly, so that persons can get meat, groceries, fruits, etc., in ample time.

I will also go over the route every afternoon, so that I can deliver any orders in the evening that may be needed for the morning meal. I believe that by this method I can serve my patrons better than ever, and that keeping the meats in the ice box, they will be much more sweet and wholesome than if carried about the streets in a butcher's cart in the heat.

This is the only way to do it.

It is the only way to do it.
