> Fierce Battle Between Bulls. The Washington Times prints a story of a desperate battle between a Durham bull and a sacred bull of India on the place of A. E. Randle, at Congress Heights, near Washington. The animals are magnificent specimens and were pastured in separate inclosures. The Durham went to the dividing fence and bellowed a challenge to the sacred bull, and was answered promptly. Then the Durham broke down the fence and the animals locked horns. There was a bitter contest for half an hour and much blood was spilled. Some men watched the encounter, but were afraid to attempt o separate the bulls. According to the story the India bull made a mighty effort and managed to toss his antagonist into the air and over the dividing fence. This was enough for the Durham, which turned tail and ran bellowing away. The ground where the battle was fought is said to have been torn up as if by a steam plow.
