Every housekeeper knows the crust that forms on the inside and that looks bad, though it does not injure the usefulness of the can. Put a tablespoonful of lye in half a gallon of rainwater. Let it get hot and pour over the lids. Let them stand in it twenty minutes, but not on the stove, as heat loosens the porcelain lining. Remove to clear water and wash well.

The genuine diamond back terrapin is found only on the shores of Chesapeake bay, and they are not plentiful. To catch a diamond back hunters search the marshes, armed with only a stick about the size of a ramrod and having a steel point. They watch for depressions in the shallow water of the marsh and then begin to prod. The steel strikes the back of the terrapin, and it is an easy matter to dig through a foot of soft mud to its resting place. The catch of two seven inch terrapin is a lucky week's hunt.
