That was probably the most terrific outburst ever known by civilized man before the Krakatoa mantled the sea with pumice and minute dust, and for many weeks tinted the skies of all the world by the dust into which it had burst its rocks. So Coseguiana also threw its dust so high into the sky that it hid from the sunshine all the region within 350 miles, and even fell upon Jamaica, 800 miles to windward.

It would be tedious, and useless, to attempt to count all the volcanoes which dot the line between Coseguina in Nicaragua and Colima in Mixico, for they are too many, and the once savagely flery hearts of most of them are dead and cold. And in no place in the world is the refining influences of education and light over debauchery, crime and poverty more marked than in this same district of New York, known as the Five Points. There, surrounded by the lowest forms of human vice and depravity, have arisen the noble walls of two institutions that every vear lend out of darkness and slavery into civilization and good citizenship armies of unprotected, unfed and untutored children of the slums.
