In No Other Way Can the Nation Seoure an Absolutely Pure and Equitable Administration of Public Affairs.

[Special Washington Letter.] THE people of this government are of extravagance in appropriations. proud of their government, but they know very little about it. The public schools ought to give instructions concerning municipal, county, state and federal governments. As the public schools over the government were kept down to about $300,000,000 annual.

the average member of the house of national legislation. The people are careless, and, to be plain about it, they are shamefully careless, about the selection of their congressmen and other office holders. On this account the government for many years has been partly in the hands of politicians who care nothing for the people, but seek only their own glory and enrichment. In your own congressional district you do not know 20 men who are personally acquainted with your member of congress, unless you happen to mingle with politicians, and the average readers of newspapers will not be ound mixing with politicians. In a government of the people, by the people and for the people every citizen ought to know all about his government, and all about the man or men who seek official position. If every citizen would take such an interest in public affairs as he ought to do our government would be purer, and it would be more sconomical. The people have no idea from them in taxation and expended recklessly. It is their own fault when

Charming as the fancy filigree belt may be in itself, it is not appropriate to wear with a pique shirt, and even if it were it does not become every style of figure; the stout sister, if she be wise in her day and generation, will fice from it as she would from the plague. The tendency of fashion is to shorten the waist in the back, and to lengthen it somewhat out of proportion in front. Those who really love dress invariably adopt the latest kinks almost without knowing it, yet it is not at all necessary to exaggerate fashion, for the styles of the hour are very heautiful and the best of them are cer-
