lower ones, planning to have the blussoms as varied as possible. The hearts of the violets are then embroidered with a few stitches of pale green floss on the large petals running from the center a short distance down the petal. This touch of green is then surmounted by a couple of stitches in yellow at either side of it and uniting in the center, thus forming an inverted V over the ribbon. These stitches aid in holding the ribbon in place, and must be put in only after the ribbon is in its proper position.

Fifteen years ago strangers visiting South Manchester for the first time gazed in admiration upon its well kept lawns, its new and splendidly lighted mills on the east side of Elm street and its beautiful homes nestling among the trees of the forest. But to-day on the hill north-east of the old academy, and in the region south of East Center street, and north and south of West Center Street, we see in place of an almost uninhabited region about 200 new and excellent dwelling houses, while these old mills which once were our ad miration are eclipsed and overshadowed by the massive, model mills across the street, where acres of machinery are for the support of the schools, and in some towns the amount raised by taxation for the support of the schools exceeds that raised for all other purposes combined. Now it is not good business to expend such large sums for the financial support of our schools and then to support them in no other way. Your attitude as parents towards the schools must have a profound effect upon the attitude of your children. When the teachers are respected and the school laws rigidly and cheerfully obeyed by parents, there will be far less complaint of poor schools, unruly children and general lawlessness in the community.
