Caring for the Baby Is Robbed of Many Trials by Adopting a Rational System.

ittle about the care of babies, and this lack of knowledge is apt to make the task seem a very difficult one. Let his clothes be soft, warm and comfortable. We often fail to realize how much more sensitive he is to changes of temperature than we are, and are not careful enough to guard against them. The room in which he stays should be kept as near the same temperature as ossible, and well ventilated, but avoid keeping him in a draft or he will be apt to have the colic. A healthy baby, that has not been taught bad habits, will be happy and configured in his crib the greater part of the day, allowing duties, or to rest. He does not need to be held in your arms all the time. and he never needs to be carried about to amuse him. Few mothers are strong enough for that task, and they should. hever begin it. A great deal of worry and many cross spells might be saved the mother would begin by having regular hours for feeding and bathing the baby. The bath should never be neglected, for so much of his comfort depends upon it that he will be restess and cross without ft. Have the room warm and the water just warm enough for comfort. Get the bath tub in place, with towels and clean clothes hung on a chair before the fire, so they will be at hand when needed. Bathe him quickly, and wipe him dry with a very soft linen towel. Dust him under the arms and any other places that seem in danger of chaffing with a powder composed of ten parts talcum powder and one part boracic acid, thoroughly mixed by sifting together two or three times. This is very soothing and healing, and when prepared at home it is inexpensive, and one can be sure to have it pure. Slip his clothes ing and twisting as possible, and if he on and fasten them with as little turnis not hungry he will fall into a quiet, refreshing sleep. When babies are teething they need special care to keep them well. They should have plenty of simple and nuritious food that is easily digested. The gums become swollen and the mouth feverish. Give them a drink of water occasionally and see how eagerly they take it. Any tendency toward diarrhoea should be checked at once
