The Oda mine adjusts itself automatically to any depth of water, and from what descriptions of it have reached the outside world, appears to be very similar to the mine invented by Capt. Offley of our navy, and wideused in the British service. It is laimed for it that it carries an enormous charge of explosive, so that if a ship should touch it, that ship is cortain to be destroyed. Large numbers of these mines have been laid near Port Arthur, and they have accounted for several Russian vessels besides the Petropavlock, which sank in a little egraphy, however, has proved an enemy as well as a friend; it was from a wireless message sent out by one of the Russian ships, on the night of February 8, that Togo learned where his enemy's main force was lying. The Russians, in the later stage of the siege of Port Arthur, have used wireless telegraphy to maintain their communications with that fortress, erect ing an installation on neutral Chinese territory at Chefoo and thence sending and receiving messages. The Japanese, in their indirect bombardments of Port Arthur, employed wireless telegraphy to signal the fall of the shells. A cruiser off the harbor watched where the projectiles alighted, and then signalled exact particulars to the battleships which were behind the Laotishan promontory and out of sight. On land the Russians have em-
