The Lesson of Mrs. Easy and Her Servants - Wives Should Cultivate Their Brains Nagging Not Only Useless, but Harmful.

I wouldn't engage a maid who had "But why?" asked her friend.

"Because she spoils her servants.

She has to change them every few months. No matter how good they are when they come to her, they soon get so that they don't do any work. I am sorry to say most domestics resemble horses. When you first ride a borse he tries some trick, like cantering when you want him to trot. He just does it to see whether you mean businese with him or not. If you weakmindedly let him have his way that first time you might as well give up riding him. He will do what he pleases with you. Well, a maid is the same. She usually tries after she has been a week in a place to see what she can do with her mistress. If the mistress backs down at that time she makes with a maid, but you must be firm with her. Another mistake that Mrs. Easy makes is that she is too familiar. When she is lonely, instead of going out of the house and seeking the society of her own kind she sits in the kitchen and gossips with her maid. Now, that is all wrong, because naturally the maid who is treated as an equal by her mistress one day resents being 'called down' sharply by the same woman the next. The result is' Mrs Easy pever can afford to criticise her maids or lay down any necessary laws. She knows they won't stand for it. So the house is kept in order only after a slipshod fashion. The maids run it and incidentally run the mis Salvation Army in the town hall at the tress of it too. If she proves refrac tory, a threat to leave usually reduces

Suits For All Men And All Men Suited

You'll find it the easiest thing in the world to make the proper selection of a Suit here. You can't make any mistake because we have nothing here but Good Clothes. We would be doing ourselves an injury as well as you if we sold you anything else. We're just as careful about the Clothes we sell as we are about those we wear ourselves. We can conscientiously recommend them in the strongest possible terms. Not only do they look right and feel right, but they stay right-they stand the test of time. No other store is offering, nor can offer, such big values for the money as we are now offering.
