Features in this Column: The Wright Boys' Sister Mrs. Cleveland's Girls Iowa Girl as a Soldier

Miss Katherine Wright, sister of Or-ville and Wilbur Wright, masters of the zeroplane, is entitled to the con-sideration of every man and woman The success of her brothers and the attention that has been bestowed upon her, even by those born in purple, have not dased her womanly nature. She remains the gentle and tender girl that Dayton, O., knew and admired. When her brother Orville met with his accident at Fort Myer in experimenting with his aeroplane she hur-ried to him and nursed him in the hospital. The army surgeon in attendance said that Orville would hardly have recovered but for the presence and loving care of his sister. With sweet simplicity she said when asked if the care of her brother did not inconvenience her: "Orville has often taken care of me when I was sick. Why shouldn't I take care of him? I am getting my chance to return what he did for me. Why not?"

Some years before this same brother was ill in Dayton. His sister and brother were with him then. That was when the brothers conducted a bicycle shop in the town. When they were together in the sickroom they talked about flying machines. Orville | was enthusiastic over the suggestion. She said somebody would do it, and why not the Wright brothers? When why not the Wright brothers? When Orville recovered he and his brother York on business and is at the Hotel went to work. There is also a strong sentiment in favor of killing off the whole matter. There are not a few, outside of the corporation officials or representatives, who honestly believe that there is no demand for a commission in this state at this time and that conditions are not such that there is a crying need for one. It will have to be admitted by everybody, whatever their position, that there is the best of ground for the first part of this assumption, or belief, in the fact that there was no strong showing of any popular demand made before the Judiciary committee, which certainly gave every opportunity for this.

TEARING DOWN FOUNDATIONS

A three-act comedy entitled "The Blundering Mr. Brown" was capably presented at Cheney hall last evening under the auspices of Manchester Grange Patrons of Hu-bandry, the reformers being principally East Hartford people. Alexander M. Green, the veteran editor of Fraternal News, a newspiperman of wide experience and a man known generally in fraternal circles up and down the state of Connecticut was manager of the production and also represented one of the characters in the play. Mrs. F. S. Forbes acted as prompter for the performance.
