Three days later Tom Turner called the band together in great anxiety. Every man knew the reason. They had seen "Stingy" Verner's placing posters. The owner of the grove was going to hold an opposition picnic. Colored posters four feet long were adverted by marching music. Besides, the people were hungry.

Four fat beeves were slaughtered by order of Martin Verner, cut in quarters and carted to the edge of the barbeaue trench about midnight. Several cords of wood were dumped near by, with plenty of kindling. Old Uncle Ike arrived shortly after the beef quarters were delivered on the ground. With him was a tall young darky, a stranger in town.
