Their Cares Begin Early, and They Win Husbands by Hard Work. "Filipino women know how to win ousbands," says an American woman who is living at Manila. "It is a common thing In the islands to see a girl, young and brown and strong, crushing rice with a heavy wooden mallet, while around her sit a number of admiring swains, looking on, but never dreaming of offering to help. And the girl doesn't expect it. She pounds cheerfully away, and by and by her reward omes in a husband to work for.

'Life accustoms the Filipino woman to labor at a very early age. As a tiny girl she is rarely seen without an appendage in the shape of a baby brother or sister perched on her little brown hip. When she grows a few inches tailer and a few degrees stronger she is pressed into service as a water carrier, bearing heavy jars of water poised gracefully on her head from the river to her home. Now, too, she works in the fields, and a vivid bit of color she makes in her short kilted scarlet skirt. When she becomes a woman-and she is a woman at fifteen or before-she may have a small shop to tend, and there is the rice to beat and much other work to do.

"Marriage brings no vacation. She is pretty sure to have many children to care for. She tends the fields, cooks and frequently has a stall in the market for several hours a day. But when the women are really old then their rest time comes. They sit quietly by, looking on as life goes past them, but taking part no more. In spite of the hard labor they have had there is generally a very peaceful look in the brown, wrinkled faces of these old women." New York Tribune.

A ROYAL BED.

The Magnificent One That Was Used by Queen Elizabeth. An interesting description of the magnificence of a bedstead ordered for Queen Elizabeth's use is found in a "wardrobe warrant" dated 1581 and quoted in "Gleanings After Time." It was of walnut tree, richly carved, painted and gilded. The celure, tester and valance were of cloth of silver, figured with velvet, fined with changeable taffets and deeply fringed with

Venice gold, silver and silk. The curtains were of costly tapestry curiously and claborately worked, every seam and every border laid with gold and silver lace, caught up with long loops and buttons of bullion. The headpiece was of crimson satin of Bruges, edged with a passaymayn of crimson silk and decorated with six ample plumes containing seven dozen ostrich feathers of various colors profusely decorated with gold spangles, The counterpoint was of orange colcred satin quilted with cutwork of cloths of gold and silver and of sating of every imaginable tint embroidered with Venice gold, silver spangles and beautifully colored silks fringed to cor-

Graft in the Household.

The tipping system has become acute now that graft is boldly recognized as "business," and the world has no shame for the majority of workers in the vineyard. A charming young mafron exclaimed the other day that graft had even invaded her household. She was asked how that were possible and replied, "I have discovered that my most trusted and faithful maid has been approached by some one who shall be nameless to advise the cook, who is another treasure, to leave me." "But she did not?" "Yes, she did," said the young matron, laughing. "Yes, she did, and I don't blame her for the price. My nice Julia was paid $20 to sell me out, and the cook's wages are about double what I can pay." "A case of bribery." "Not at all-plain, unvarnished graft," was the philosophic response,-Boston Herald.
