TABLES FOR OUTDOOR LUNCHEONS

HIS is the season of the al fresco luncheon, when the gentle breezes of summer call hostess and guests out of doors. But the prudent en tertainer will be sure that the winds are little more than zephyrs, since nothing is more disconcerting than to have the breezes take with them, wherever they list, the napery and furnishings of one's tables, together with some of the lighter viands. A sheltered spot outdoors, wherein the holiday makers may sit and enjoy the air without being subjected to the for aches and pains there is discomforts of contact with the atmosphere in too violent motion, is worthy
