FIRE DISTRICT MEETING Old Officers Re-elected But Got Called For Inaction

The annual meeting of the South Manchester Fire District was held in the town hall last evening and proved a very orderly affair until it came time for a motion to adjourn. Then some of those present said things to the district officers, and members of different companies until it finally assumed the proportions of an anvil cholla.

The meeting was called to order at 7 o'clock by President Frank Cheney Jr. Secretary E. Watkins read the minutes of the last annual meeting and Treasurer J. W. Hale presented his annual report which was as follows:

Balance on hand, August, 1910, $110.00. Loans, 600.00. Error in bill paid, 2.65. Tax collected, 16,885.21. Received from state tax, 519.88. Total, $18,108.90.

Chief O. J. Atwood's report showed that there had been 32 fire alarms during the year. Nine of these had been box calls and twenty three still alarms. Of the twenty-three still alarms, the chemical of Hose Company No. 3 had responded to twenty-one of them.

Notice is hereby given to all legal voters of the South Manchester Fire District that the annual meeting of said District will be held in the Town Hall, Manchester, Thursday evening, August 17, 7:30 P. M. for the following purposes:

Married In Haste

But There Is No Record of Repenting at Leisure

By F. A. MITCHELL

"I wish you to be my bridesmaid," wrote my friend Clara Wightman, "and you are to be matched with George's best man. Of all men John Bucklin is the best, except George, who, you know, is the best in the world to me just now. And I have a feeling down my heart that you and John will make a match. He is everything you could wish for, except a means. But he is self reliant, ambitious, full of energy and hope, and, after all, a marriage with the kind of man brings more happiness than wealth. At any rate, it brings more rest to life."

I don't know anything that will more interest a girl than to have some one say, "I have a man picked out for you to marry." A pleasing curiosity is aroused at once. True, these partners picked out by a third person are usually just what the girl doesn't want, or she doesn't want her, or they are repulsive to each other. Nevertheless they meet them—at least the girl—lives in a world of romance. She wonders what he is like in appearance, in intellect, in disposition, forming an ideal picture of him which when she sees him brings a great disappointment. Perhaps this is the reason such intended matches seldom materialize.

Instead of being disappointed in John Bucklin I was greatly pleased with him. His serious looks indicated that the world was to him an important problem. I had feared he would turn out one of those so-called fascinating society men that I did not admire. He was very deferential to me, but if he had been told that I had been picked out for him he showed no consciousness of the fact. Altogether our meeting was satisfactory in all respects but one. Mr. Bucklin showed no sign whatever that he took more interest in me than was warranted by the fact that I was matched with him at a wedding ceremony.

However, the acquaintance made on that occasion was continued and Mr. Bucklin became a regular caller at our house. He was usually very busy, but found time to show me some attention. Yet it seemed to me that he was doing it to please Clara, with whom he was on very friendly terms. Occasionally I would twist her with the picture of her plan for me, whereupon she would say: "I don't think John considers himself able to marry just now. Besides, it seems to me that you treat him with marked indifference." As he excused for Mr. Bucklin, I did not consider them of any moment whatever. I was surprised at her saying that I treated him with indifference, for I was not conscious of doing so. And yet Clara was doubtless right. If a man is not to be a mutual friend and the man in the case does not make a move in a matrimonial direction the girl is very likely to treat him with either indifference or something more pronounced.

Result at Bull Run Awakens the North to the Gravity of the Situation—Congress Authorizes Raising Army of Half a Million Men—Washington Seriously Menaced by Victorious Confederates, but They Fail to Take Advantage of Their Victory—“Both Armies Fairly Beaten,” Said Sherman—McClellan Goes to Washington and Finds “No Preparations Whatever for Defense”—Sketch of Early Life of This Commander—Disbanding of Three Months Men Temporarily Weakens Northern Army.

By JAMES A. EDGERTON.

THE first stage of the civil war ended with the battle of Bull Run. Dating from that event the struggle took on its final character. The north suddenly awakened to the gravity of the situation. In false optimism it shattered and henceforth grim determination became its ruling spirit. After their stupor and despair had time to wear off the free states rallied again, but this time their eyes were fully opened to the peril. Recruiting began once more with redoubled energy, but now the soldiers realized as never before that it was a life and death conflict, whose duration or outcome no man could foresee. At last the farmer, lawyer and business man of the north knew that the nation was in deadly peril. Yet they were more eager than before to offer themselves for its defense. This feeling was shared by all classes. Bull Run was such a shock to the north as Sumter, but this time there was iron in the blow. After the terrible Sunday of July 21 nothing was possible. Washington might be held in session and authorized the raising of an army of half a million men. The north was to meet the call. The panic following the first great battle lasted only a few days, but the effects of Bull Run were felt to the end of the war.

The north was depressed, the south was accordingly elated. Bull Run untried her. Henceforth little was heard of the Union men in the second campaign. In the midst of the masses had settled the war. Within a week

The national capital would be taken and Jefferson Davis would occupy the White House. The cry of “On to Richmond” was still for the moment uncontradicted. On July 20, 1861, the Confederate congress had met at the Virginia capital on July 20 and shared in the general joy.

Bull Run Disputes. There had been more irrelevant comment on Bull Run than on any other battle of modern times. On July 20, 1861, the Confederate congress had met at the Virginia capital on July 20 and shared in the general joy.

McClellan, fresh from his victories in western Virginia, was given a new department, being placed over both Manassas and Manassas. Both Manassas was sent to relieve Patterson, and General John A. Dix took the place of Banks at Baltimore.

His Popularity and His Skill as an Organizer and Driller of Troops—Extra Session of Congress Adjourns.

By JAMES A. EDGERTON.

THE week ending Aug. 5, 1861, saw little actual fighting. The battle at Dug Springs, Mo., was the only one worthy the name. The condition of the two contending armies was roughly as follows: Both congresses were in session, that at Washington being near its close, as the extra session adjourned on Aug. 4. The Federal army at Washington was commanded by General John A. Dix in command at Baltimore and General B. P. Butler at Fort Monroe. Both quick General Banks had supplanted Patterson in the vicinity of Harpers Ferry, in western Virginia. General W. S. Rosecrank had succeeded McClellan at Richmond. General Lee had just been designated to command the Confederates in place of General Garnett, killed at Rich Mountain. In Kentucky Colonel Anderson, of Sumner fame, was recruiting for the Federals.

Washington was “Easy.” It was on the afternoon of Friday, July 28, that General McClellan reached the city. His arrival was greeted with much rejoicing. He was a popular figure, and his presence in the city was a relief to many. He immediately set to work to organize the Federal forces. He found no preparations whatever for defense, not even to the extent of putting the troops in military positions.

General John A. Dix, adjutant of the Federal dispatch, “IF ANY MAN DARES SHOW HIM ON THE SPOT,” ORDERED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

The first task undertaken by the new commander was that of keeping the soldiers out of the streets and hotels of Washington, which he did by preventing them from leaving camp without a permit. The next thing was to restore the morale of the army, which was done by increasing discipline, by keeping the regiments moist and disorganized in Washington and sending the others across the river; also by the general going among his men frequently, reviewing them, assuring them that they had met their last defeat and by like methods.

McClellan arrived in Washington on July 28. With his advent and that of the magnificent army he drilled and organized being the second phase of the war. Whatever may be the difference of opinion as to McClellan, the soldier, there are none as to McClellan, the drillmaster. It is with the creation of the Army of the Potomac that the remainder of 1861 is chiefly concerned. There were to be only a few more battles of importance, both sides having been content to spend the fall and winter in preparation before the general fighting of 1862.

Battle of Dug Springs. The last of July the Federal commander learned that the Confederates were on the march toward Springfield with more than 20,000 troops. They were approaching in two columns, one from the south and the other from the west. He decided to attack them in detail and for this purpose moved out with his army on Aug. 1, leaving a small garrison in the town. He aimed his first attack at the force marching from the south. By night he had advanced ten miles to Cave creek, where he encountered the Confederates. The next morning he marched to Dug Springs, where he met the enemy under General Rains.

EDGAR ALLAN POE—Celebrated poet and short story writer. Born Boston Jan. 19, 1809; died Baltimore Oct. 7, 1849. Son of actors, he was adopted by John Allan of Richmond and educated in America and Europe. Spent some time at West Point, but was expelled. On being disowned by his adopted father he made a precarious living with his pen, editing various periodicals, writing criticisms and turning out an occasional poem or short story. He is regarded as one of the great short poets of the world. “The Raven” and “Annabel Lee” had almost as great a vogue. His remaining short stories are still read widely. In 1847 Poe’s wife died, and he was thrown very ill. He never seemed to recover from the blow, and two years later was picked up in the streets of Baltimore in a drunken condition.
