that women liked a few years ago!
It was virtually a skirt; a wide gird!le and shoulder strape, and was worsover a blouse of washable fabric. Well it is here again in a charming revival of style, having profited by its respite, according to the New York Press.

Modistes have launched a few models of the dress that has "braces" or suspanders, and it bids fair to be one of the features that spell practical beauty. From a comparatively small piece of material and a variety of separate chiffon, net or washable blouses, this new favorite will assure a change of dress at little expense.

Shoulder straps are seen on some of the advanced blouse models, showing that this ides has been seized by designers as a welcome change for the perennial favorite. These extensions are generally of the same material as the girdle and act as contrast over lace and tuile.

Buttons are used as trimming on these shoulder straps with great effect. They afford excellent background for continuing any decorgive idea.

There are small hats with high round crowns, folded in around the top. Two-toned velour hats are among the newest models and there is an irid-escent blue and black plush hat which is most striking and becoming to the verage woman. A large sombrero of relvet is trimmed with a black leather belt, dull leather with a gilt buckle. The shape is extremely smart. A rather high-crowned narrow brimmed hat of two-toned iridescent plush is in blue and black. The hat has a crown of shot silk and is trimme with two made plumes of the plush. A small black plush hat, extremely dashing in effect, has a white-satin band inside the brim and three fancy black feathers at one side.
