mind, and that part of his very soul which will guide him to do right.

Now what shall we think of the corporation which also binds this man to "do only what he is told to do"—to follow rules that leave him no discretion, no liberty to exercise that and his best judgment? How can one forget that he is a mere hired man if he is reduced by iron rules to the mere machine-like execution of some execution. The process of the present day as follows:

In orther words, two absolutely impossible things are desired. First, slavish devotion to rules made at a distance; second, mandy enlistment of the entire being of a person who is possessed of deliberate powers.

The "hired man" is a natural result of too many rules—of the want of coal fidence, of distrust. The employs is
