It was this same man who, one day when the conversation turned on celebrated travelers, saw a chance too good to be missed. Marco Polo's name had just been mentioned.

"Marco Polo," said the man in a casual manner, flicking off the end of his cigar. "Oh, yes, my old father was his guide. A nice man. He came from Russia. How old was he? Well, I never saw him myself; it was be-fore my time. About forty-five, I should say. He had a grand horse he brought with him all the way from his own country. He gave it to my father, but the poor beast died from grief when the old man pegged out." It would seem that this was just the sort of person on whom Marco Polo, when he traveled in that part of the world, actually depended for in-

UPSET THE QUIET OLD TOWN dignant Bees, Loose on Philadelphia Streets, Made Citizens Forget Their Dignity.

A winged peril descended on shoreward bound crowds at the Market street ferries, Philadelphia, recently, sending men, women and children currying for safety. Some of them weren't quick enough, and as a consequence, spent a day nursing, on arious parts of the anatomy, stings of peeved and indignant bees. It happened when a box containing a hive of forty thousand bees fell from an express wagon at the ferry.

The box, which was consigned to a man in Swedesboro, N. J., broke as it ell, and the hive rolled out. Peeved at the indignities heaped upon them, army of stingers attacked a street cleaner. With a howl he dropped his broom and took refuge in a saloon. About the same time the other bees got busy. The crowds scattered and in a short time the ferries were deserted, save for the buzzing swarm. Frantic messages were sent to the company which shipped the bees and representative of the firm hurried to the place. He nailed up the box and sent it on its way, minus several hundred honey gatherers.

Fee Was Lost. The age and duliness of the miscellaneous reading-matter with which physicians stock the tables of their waiting-rooms have long been a sub-ject of jest. Here is a story which shows that it might be to the doctor's own interest to supply more enter-taining reading.

Speaking at the annual diner of the Royal Society of Medicine on one oc-casion, Mr. Birrell declared that only once had he been in search of a phy-"I determined," he said, "on that single occasion at least, to die sec-undum artem. I started off to consult

I was in a profuse perspiration when I arrived. I had to with and on the doctor's table I found the book written by him on 'my disease. I opened it at random and read: "The patient who is suffering from this disease never perspires." I at once walked out."—London Telegraph.

The betting was proportionately greater, While there was no way of estimating with accuracy the amount wagered on the series, men who handle wagers announced that upwards of $500,000 changed hands. Most of the bets were made on the winner of the series at even money, although many brokers whose impatience would not telerate delay placed their money on the result of each game. Houses with Philadelphia wire connections had offers covering all the Giant money that could be raised. One member of the Stock Exchange wagered $500 even with a fellow-member that Philadelphia would win the series. There were many freak bets of small amounts, a favorite one being that Baker would get a home run during the series. Another popular wager was that Mathewson would win the first game he pitched. Curb brokers established an open market for bets on the series, where almost any kind of a proposition found a taker.

A hundred pairs of eyes from all parts of the long corridor turned as by occult attraction and fixed themselves in not to bother about anything that had happened during the last three or four years. Your men would be busy on that; and there'd be nothing to find, anyhow. I set my man to scratching up ancient history. I told him to go back and back and back in Standish's record; and to keep on going back till he found something."

The man whose advent in the Keswick corridor caused more attention among the loungers than would the arrival of a stage heauty, had at first glance little about him to justify such interest. He was long rather than tall, thin with a wiry compactness, and of a pleasant non-committal face. His age might have been fifty. But a closer glance at his half-shut eyes at ways gave an odd impression that they were fully a thousand years old. Perhaps this was why Jim Blake seldom opened them wide.

"Hello, boya," repeated Jim Blake.

Gertrude flung aside her broom and followed him. Alicia slipped from the wall and ran after Gertrude. Just as the two girls reached the gate a long gray motor car swept swiftly down the hill; there was just time to note that the chauffer's eyes were dreamily fixed on the peak of Old Man mountain when the tragedy happened.

There was a startled hoot from the siren of the car that mingled with the dying squeal of the prise porker. The car jerked heavity and came to a standstill just as Gertrude, white-lipped and with two burning spots in her cheeks, flew across the intervening space to the side of the car.

"And then he woke up!" she cried with bitter surcasm as she faced the bewildered young man at the steering wheel.

"No, it isn't. You see this is an unusual hog—we were raising it for the county fair; we have tolled all summer over these hogs—and now!" Gertrude's voice quavered alarmingly.

Jack's rumbling hand found his cheque book. "I must insist upon paying for the hog," he said practically. "If you will tell me its value and add to it the amount of the prize you expected to take, I shall be happy to refund you the money."

"Of course we might not have taken a prize—but—it was for the pair of Chestars that we were striving. We would rather have the hog and get the prize—the honor belongs to the White farm," explained Gertrude coldly.

Jack thought rapidly. He was willing to do anything to placate this angry young woman. His face brightened.

Here, on Nov. 4, 1873, four Cuban patriots, Cespedas, Ryan, Del Sal and Verona, who were passengers on the suspected filibuster, were put to death. On the 7th and 8th of the month Captain Fry. thirty-six of the crew and sixteen passengers were summarily executed. Before the Spanish could complete the executions a British man-of-war came into the harbor and stopped proceedings. Dec. 18 the Spanish surrendered the Virginius and 102 survivors of the expedition. On her return north the Virginius foundered of Cape Fear. There was great excitement in the United States over the incident, but since the papers of the Virginius were found fregular it was clear that the voyage was in violation of the neutrality laws, and the matter was adjusted through the usual diplomatic interchanges.

SPECIAL CLUB SALE And Get Out of Town And Demonstration of New Home Sewing Machines MONDAY, OCT. 20th to SATURDAY, OCT. 25th An expert woman demonstrator direct from the New Home factory will be here all next week to give instructions to new purchasers and also to teach ons craft.

all the latest wrinkles in fancy sewing to present users of New Home Machines. What The Club Is Twenty-five women can join the NEW HOME club by payment of only two dollars and have a NEW HOME Sewing Machine delivered at once. Payments of One Dollar weekly take care of the balance in a very short time.

What You Get

You get the spot cash price, $37.50 for the best machine. You get expert instruction free.

You get life long guarantee. That the NEW HOME is the one best machine for home use is doubted y few Manchester people.

There are so many in constant daily use here and the owners are so uni formly satisfied that it is not necessary to multiply reasons why you should buy a NEW HOME. Suffice to say that the NEW HOME is the simplest constructed, the most durable and the easiest running sewing machine made. You are especially invited to see the demonstration next week whether you are interested in buying one or not.

WATKINS BROTHERS Inc.

Elman Brothers Fourth Anniversary

We have just completed four years of business in South Manchester. We have grown steadily from year to year, but the last year's business has far excelled any of the other three. We cannot help but feel gratified that the public appreciate our honest efforts to place before them merchandise of excellent quality at prices lower than the city stores ask for the same goods. This we are able to do by reason of small expense. We cannot better show our appreciation of your patronage than by placing before your for a limited time, our entire stock marked at such generous reductions in price that you cannot fail to take advantage of the savings offered. In addition to our regular stock : have been able to gather a number of exceptional barg ains in small lots of garments and other goods. We bought them below their real worth, we'll give you the benefit at this sale.
