Why a Used High Grade Piano Is Better Than

In the first place the high grade piano case was made of seasoned wood built up by slow process and finished with the most costly materials known to science. We have in our store a Steinway upright and a Henry F. Miller, both having been used over twenty years. On neither of one these pianos can you find scarcely a check mark.

This is a difference you will see, anyone will see at first glance. In the second place the high grade piano was built and strung and voiced by highly skilled workmen, each piano receiving individual treament just exactly as though it were the only piano that particular workman would ever build. Pianos that are made by the lot, dozens at a time cannot receive that individual attention which produces the distinct tone quality characteristic of a really fine instrument,

The pianos offered at this sale in many instances have been used but little, Mostly they have been turned in for player or grand pianos and represent many years of service for the prospective buver.

The best argument for buying now lies in the pianos themselves. We arge your early inspection.
