midnight, the Lyric orchestra, under the direction of Ben Parker furnishing the music, which was printed in the columns of The News last week. The selections were of a decidedly green tinge throughout and fitted into the occasion admirably. It was adapted to the modern dances, however and was so used. There were sixteen numbers of the dance program. The stage entertainment started at 8.20 and lasted one hour. Dancing began at 9.20. It was a pleasant sight to see a many children at the celebration. They took their places on the floor in the new dances and fitted into their surroundings quite comfortably and happily. They showed the advantages of the new schools of dancing which many of them are attending. In order that the old time dancers might not be left entirely out of the reckoning, two square dances were provided on the dancing program. The stage front was fittingly ornamented with palms and ferns in profusion—all green—and potted plants dorned the windows. The large satin American and Irish banners owned by the Iccal Hibernians were given a prominent place at the rear of the stage setting. This had to be done at the conclusion of the stage program, as the organ had to used and the setting could not be completed until after the finish of the entertainment. This was the first time that the Hibernians called into use the organ at Cheney Hall in their St. Patricks Day celebration. The introduction of a stage entertainment was a pleasant feature and delighted the audience very much. All the performers were greeted with enthusiastic applause and were given abundant assurance that their efforts were heartily satisfactory. The attendance was quite cosmopolitan and was not by any means limited to persons of Irish nationality or extraction. The wearing of the Died In Sweden
