

EAT MORE BREAD.

Bread is the one food which perfectly combines in itself all the elements which give strength to the body. It is, and always has been, the chief food of the earth's hardiest people.

None of the breakfast foods, health foods or other food foods can equal bread in nourishment. Nor can meat or other heavy foods.

Because of its lightness and tenderness, perfect digestibility and its sweet nutty flavor, Goetz's bread is the most nutritious and appetizing of all foods.

Eat more Goetz's bread. Makes the young strong and the strong healthier.

Swelled Heads. To some people the title of this article may not be very enticing nor elegant in appearance. We admit there is nothing sentimental about it, but believe it to be a warning of a man's malady which is becoming alarmingly prevalent especially among our young people. We do not anticipate that our feeble remarks on this subject will affect a cure of the disease, but subject may appeal to that most desirable but fast disappearing quality—common sense.

CHAPTER XV.

Another Trip Set.

If the trip to Vron told Jones was so deeply chastened as was the outcome of the counterfeited case as was Vron. They had both failed signally to reach the goal sought. But this time the orchestra had broken even with Jones, and this fact disturbed the butler. It might signify that the turning point had been reached, and that in the future the good luck might swing over to the side of the Black Hundred. Jones rejoiced his cautions, reiterated his regrets, and slept less than ever before, as he went over the ground he covered a point to the Black Hundred. He would no longer be able to keep tabs on the gratification. He had departed their former quarters absolutely. The agent of whom they had leased the building knew nothing about what he would have to repair the place. The rent had been paid a year in advance, as it had been these last eight years. He had seen through a lawyer who knew no more of his clients than the agent. So it would be seen that Jones had in reality received a check.

More than all this it would give his coming renewed confidence; and this was deeper manna than he could have asked for. He would now be able to go on as usual, giving no hint to any one of the mental travail which had possession of him.

It is needless to state Norton did not keep his rivals on the counter. But he got to work explaining to the owner of the building, and in his own corner he found a battered clock. He turned this over to a street service man. There was one man he wanted to see—Florence. He called on her, and she told him she had been told to leave him, but she would see to it that he should be paid in full. She had the telephone ring again at that moment it is quite probable that the day would have come to a close as the day before had, monotonously. But the ring came five minutes after Jones had left the house.

"Yes," said the woman. "It is Miss Hargrave talking."

"This is Doctor Morse. I am at the Queen Hotel. Mr. Norton has been badly hurt, and he wants you and Mr. Jones to come at once. We cannot tell just how serious the injury is. He is just comatose. Shall I tell him you will come immediately?"

"Yes, yes."

Florence snapped the receiver on the hook. She wanted to go, by. He was hurt. How, where, when? She had to find out.

"What is it, Florence?" she asked. "Susan?" "Susan?" she asked. "What is it, Florence?" she asked. "Susan?" "Susan?" she asked. "What is it, Florence?" she asked. "Susan?" "Susan?" she asked. "What is it, Florence?" she asked. "Susan?" "Susan?" she asked. "What is it, Florence?" she asked. "Susan?" "Susan?" she asked.

Norton went back to the primrose path of love, and someone would have bought all about such a thing as the Black Hundred. So the summer days went by, with the lilacs and the roses showering the Hargraves with their fragrance. Norton took note of the fact that Florence was no longer the tight-rope schoolgirl he had first met. Her trials had made a serious woman of her, and perhaps this phase was all the more enlightening to him, who had in serious side also. Her young mind was like an Italian garden, always peering new vistas for his admiring eye.

He went about his work the same as if he were not a man of letters, interviewing, playing detective, attending his pay envelope by special on the Sunday edition and some of the lighter magazines. Sometimes he had vague dreams of writing a play, a novel, and making a tremendous fortune like that cheap Mandan, who only a few years ago had been his desk mate. He really began the first chapter of a novel; but that has nothing to do with this history.

All ready, then. The chess are once more on the board, and it is the move of the Black Hundred.

The day was rather cloudy. Jones viewed the sky wearily. He could hear Florence playing rather a cheerless nocturne by Chopin. Fourteen weeks ago this warfare had begun, and all he had accomplished, he and those who were his, was the death or incarceration of a few inconspicuous members of the Black Hundred. Always they struck and always he had to ward off. He had always been on the defensive; now he had a defensive fighter may last a long while, but he seldom wins; and he better know that they must win, or go down a bitter defeat. There was no half way route to the end; there could be no draw. It was just the same old old struggle.

"Who is it?" asked Florence, stopping abruptly. "I have a letter for you," said a woman behind her. "I have a letter for you," said a woman behind her. "I have a letter for you," said a woman behind her.

Always there she discovered some something like this happened. But this time they had cunningly struck at her heart, and all thought of her personal safety vanished. For the present she knew that she was in no actual physical danger. She was merely to be held as a hostage.

"What was that?" she cried, as he turned away from the telephone.

"Why?"

"You said sir."

"Jones was widowed. I did."

"Yes, and it's the first time I ever heard you use it over the telephone. Jones, you were talking to my father!"

"Please, Miss Florence, do not ask me any questions. I cannot answer any. I dare not."

"But if I should command, upon the pain of dismissal?"

"Thank you, but I cannot. I am sorry, very sorry," said the butler, torn between the desire to comfort her and the law that he had sworn to obey.

The J. C. Connor Company, Inc. of Schenectady, N. Y., proved to be the successful bidder for the sidewalk and curbing work to be done by the town during the coming year. This matter was decided by the selection at the special meeting last Monday night. J. C. Connor of the firm was present before and after the contract was awarded, and the selection had a heart to hear talk with Mr. Connor. He established them in all their questions and made a very favorable impression before the board.

Attention Housekeepers!

Now that spring house-cleaning time is at hand housekeepers are sure to find pieces of furniture about their homes that are in need of repair. It is always a puzzling problem to find just where you can have necessary repairs properly done, and how quickly the work can be accomplished. These questions can be readily answered by the services of the Pottery-Morgan-Corner Co.

Mutt and Jeff in Mexico

Gus Hill's new "Mutt and Jeff" production called "In Mex-co" will be seen at the Parsons Theater this Friday and Saturday, with a Saturday matinee. This season's offering is entirely new with the exception of the two droll characters "A Mutt" and his little pal "O'Ethel". Montgomery Jeffrey is in the paramount object of the play. Mr. Hill has been lavish in his expenditures relative to scenery and electrical embellishments. One of the scenic surprises in the pasting of a full rigged ship through the Great Panama Canal and sailing out into the Pacific Ocean with our heroes Mutt and Jeff on board. The full furnished by Bud Fisher and Owen Davie gives ample opportunity for fun of the Mutt and Jeff kind. The entire production being staged under the personal direction of Mr. Gus Hill who gives assurance of the best money can buy, or that brains can invent.—Advt.
