At appearance of their table with the tiny tray which is usually set before the children to protect the cloth. A clever device for this purpose is made of two oblong pieces of butcher's linen, sewed together in the form of a case with an oilcioth interlining. The linen is beaustitched neatly, and while it protects the cloth itself it does not mar the appearance of the table. When soiled the oilcloth is slipped out and wiped off with a damp cloth, and the linen case goes to the laundry.
