cently designed by Paquin for the eace-conference festivities. The maerial of this regal wrap was deep smoke-gray charmense with a lining of gleaming silver tissue and fringes composed of long silver tassels on the wide, cape sleeves. The whole thing, writes a Paris correspondent, was so exceedingly orignal and rich that one felt in the presence of a fairy-queen-garment. And get the color was so subdued and subde that the wrap might quite well be worn going to a restaurant dinner or an ordinary theater. It was only when it was thrown open and the dazzling lining revealed that its richness made

This is a leading note of many of the new Paris models for evening wear There are still considerable difficulties connected with getting about in the evening. Quite unexpected people find it necessary to walk to their friend's houses, or even to the theaters, instead of driving, as formerly.

Taxicabs are few and hard to find. There are still stringent rules connectd with private automobiles. The metros and omnibuses are crowded to overflowing, hence the frequent necessity of walking in evening dress. For this reason our best dressmakers are creating evening wraps which can, as indicated, be worn in the street at night without attracting undue notice Satins and velvets in soft neutral tints are very much in demand, but any man can accomplish about four times as much as he could accomplish with pen and inkin the way of recording his thoughts, if he sees fit to do so. But the contributor overlooks one thing, namely, that the matter of writing it down is not all of a thinker's work, observes Columbus Dispatch. If Franklin had had a typewriter, he would not have been hammering it all the time. It would have aided him greatly; he would have had more time b which to do his thinking; he would not have had to spend so much time over a desk scrawling with a poor pen. But it is debatable whether he would have actually produced more literature than he did. Charles Dickens wrote all of his novels with a quill. He could have done the writing in balf the time on a typewriter, and the printers would have saved half their time. But in these days of the typewriter we have no novelists who are turning ou good literature any more rapidly than Dickens dld. Thomas Jefferson left a whole library of his writing-and h while the typewriter is one of If the greatest of time savers, while it gives an Increased product and a more easily read product, the fact is that the men of to day are not doing any more writing than was done when the matter had to be scratched upon

Eggs In Waterglass

During the past two years, fresh egg prices from August 1st to March 1st have averaged twice as high as the lowest spring prices. Cold storage reports from 1918-19 show that eighty-four per cent of all the eggs stored went in between April 1 and May 1. This then, must be the season of lowest prices.

The cost of preserving eggs at home should not exceed three cents per dozen. Waterglass (Sodium Silicate) can be purchased at any durg store for twenty-five or thirty cents per quart, or less in quantity. Use one quart of waterglass with nine quarts of water which has been boiled and cooled, for each fifteen dozen eggs preserved.
