FOUGHT OFF HUNS IN TRENCHES IN FRANCE. -The American troops used what is sometimes known as the new French system of defense. and sometimes as the new German system. At the beginning of the war the front trenches were held very "thick," especially by the British. Later the idea was to have only a handman to a hundred feet, perhans: for the second line there were many more men and many more machine guns: for the third line men were much more heavily massed and reserves kept available, Lucian Swift Kirtland writes in Leslie's. This theory of defense against raids was based on the fact that . the enemy can concentrate his men in his frost lines for a sudden "over the top"-then lay down a heavy barrage. When the attacking troops come over they strike the first line with their maximum impact. They are likely to overwhelm any orthe first line obstinately. But dinery defense, and thus it is a waste of men to try to defend the human body gets tired and when the machine guns and rifles of the second line have had their innings at the attackers the enemy is beginning to slow up from natural haustion. On a counter-attack then the third line being fresh meets the enemy fired from exertion and proceeds to drive him
