-Day Dress Accessories Almost Barbaric.

> Hats Are Among Styles Offered by Paris.

There is a splendor almost barbaric present-day accessories of dress, otes a Paris fashion writer. Although production in Europe is not more than 5 per cent of normal, there appears to e no curtailment in purely decorative hings. Along with the far eastern ideas that just now are embodied in lothes comes the use of bright colors; and in color alone there is limitless ossibility for extravagant effects. Oriental girdles of brilliantly colord galalith or of heads are worn over sweaters, gowns, coats and even negligees. There are huge earrings, set with colored stones. No less a person than Lewis of Paris, makes hats with chains and carrings hanging from beneath the brim, the chains going across from one side of the brim to the other like rows of necklaces. One hat goes so far as to have a Spanish comb thrust into the side for rimming. This is a tiny hat, with an uprolling brim in front and cut very short in the back. It is overhung with a draped veil, the folds of the drapery being fastened with the comb. Vells, too, are draped under the chin, after the manner of the strings of beads mentioned above. These oddly afterned hats act as folls for the new smooth coffure that shows the hair drawn tightly back, without curl or wave of any sort, and the ends rolled under and pinned high at the back of the head, a striking mode of dressing the hair, but a trying one for many women.
