When supplying a fancy trade with eggs, or on receiving eggs from outside sources, it is often desirable to deternine their freshness. The method cenerally used by commission mertants for this purpose is known as "candling," and consists in holding egg between the eye and a light as to note the contents. This should be done in a darkened room, using one of the egg testers on the market or simple home-made tester. The air space in a perfectly fresh egg is very small, and as the egg loses part of its contents by evaporation this air space increases in size with the age of the egg. Fresh eggs should appear clear and bright, showing no dark spots. Those accustomed to "candling" soon learn to detect stale eggs with a good degree of accuracy
