Some of the Boglish troops when asked as to the origin the name, declared that the parasites were so called because the soldiers, in derision, referred to them as "cuties." To arrive however, one must go back a good deal further than the memory of any living mar. In at least three places in the British isles the word has been used for many years with varying meanings. When, for example, a Scotchman spoke of a "cootie" he referred either to a porridge-bowl or to a fewl with feathers on its legs. In Shropshire the word means "sung" or "comfort-able," while the natives of esterablire used it to refer to something that wriggled or squirmed. WE CALL MIRAGE FORMS. -One of the most celebrated mirages is that which is observed now and then from the neighborhood of Glacier bay, in Alaska, where in the distance, above a vast sheet of glacial ice, a city is seen as if uspended in the air. It has buildings of beautiful and imposing architecture, tall churches with spires and buttresses and many streets of houses, plain to the view.

This is the so-called Silent City of Alaska, The duke of the Abruzzi saw it a few years ago when he visited Alaska. Many attempts have been made to photograph it, but for some reason unexplained, without success. Some persons have gone so far as to declare that It is a view of the city of Bristol, in Irregularities of ice formation, plus imagination, doubtless account for the strange vision an uplifting of the supposed scene being attributable to mirage. Optical illusions of this kind are not uncommon in aretie and antarctic regions. There is a famous mirage, called "Fata Morgana," which on occasions is seen from the neighborhood of Reggio, in Italy, Here the effect produced is due to a layer of heated air, which by refraction of light brings into view a distorted picture of the far-away Sicilian shore. To the Italian peasant it appears as a city with palaces, towers and minarets-the mysterious home of the faire Morenna William Scoresby, the arctic explorer, describes a similar mirage which he beheld from off the coast of Greenland. He writes; "The general appearance of the coast, as viewed through a telescope, was that of an extensive ancient city. abounding in ruins of castles, obelisks, churches and monuments-a grand and interesting phantasmagoria."

A feature of arctic geography which appears on all the mans is Crocker Land, which Peary thought he saw from a mountain peak in Grant Land. The troops of Napoleon when he was in Egypt were rather frightened by mirages. And during the recent war the British of Mesopotamia were obliged on at least one occasion to stop fighting because of the confusion arising from an illusion of the kind.

As everybody knows, mirages are very common in hot desert regions. A layer of warmed and rarefied air serves as a mirage, reflecting objects above it. Thus, reflecting the sky, it may produce the effect of a sheet of water the unsteadiness of the heated air lending ripples to help out the picture and render it more deceptive.
