SIDEWALKS YARY IN THE CITIES OF OLD EUROPE The sidewalks and pavements in different countries vary much as the people. In many towns of Holland the sidewalks are private property, and one is not expected to step across them unless entering the house to which the walk belongs. In many cities the streets and sidewalks end in canals, especially in The Hagué and Rotterdam. In many Swiss towns sidemer are swarmed with tourists. In Chester, Eng., some streets have sheltered skiewalks similar to the Swiss sort, but they are even more curious, since they are raised to the second floor. The island of Malta bas dights of stairs for sidewalks, that lend to the sea.

In certain old German towns the sidewalks seem to be regarded as incidental, sometimes narrowing to a foot or two. A proclamation has been issued by be governor designating Good Friday March 25, as a day of fasting and prayer. The proclamation reads: STATE OF CONNECTICUT By His Excellency

A PROCLAMATION We justly revere the statesmanship of the fathers for the wise and helpful customs which they established for our example. Among these it is the honor of our commonwealth that here, first, the government regularly set free from secular duties the day which the Christian church has hallowed in commemoration of our Lord's great sacrifice, and thus, for many generations, the people of this state have together, without distiuction of creed or ritual, sought the forgiveness and guidance of Almighty God In accordance with this custom.
